Retrospective Views of Various Matters.

There are few, if any, civilized countries in which the first day of the year is not observed as a holiday and day of rejoicing. In England it is usually devoted to the giving of dinner and supper parties, at which long-sundered members of the family often contrive to come once more together and gather round the paternal hearth. In France le jour de l'an is devoted to visiting and the giving of presents. None must come empty-handed, and whether it be a china orange or a diamond bracelet, something must be given to every friend or acquaintance on whom a call is made. In Russia the day is also observed very strictly, though it must be remembered that as the Russians still calculate by the Julian and not by the Gregorian calendar, their New-Year's Day has already passed. In Germany and Holland, visits are paid and congratulations exchanged in a quiet way, as befits the citizens of those lands, and in Persia the curious old custom still prevails of exchanging gilded eggs, painted and decorated in much the same manner as those known among us as Easter eggs. Formerly the day was held sacred by all the Celtic tribes, and also by the Jews and Romans. The mistletoe was gathered by the Druids on this day with much ceremony, and preserved in their temples or sacred places. All this has passed, however, and the first day of the year is now regarded merely as a holiday.

The fashion of paying New-Year's calls that prevails in this good City, was set, as the chronicles inform us, some hundred and fifty years ago, when our Knickerbocker ancestors, habited in their long coats, buckled shoes and cocked hats, armed with strong walking staffs, and using no other means of locomotion than their own sturdy limbs, promenaded gravely through the principal streets of the City, and paid their respects to their friends and acquaintances. It was not a long walk then from one end of the City to the other. Their calls could all be included in a circle of one mile in diameter. They thought not of hacks, or omnibuses or street-cars. The vexed questions of underground and viaduct and arcade and pneumatic railroads never vexed them, for their own strong legs were all sufficient to carry them whither they would go. They did not hurry themselves in paying their visits; walked slowly, and with somewhat serious countenances, as if bent on business of importance; gravely saluted the heads of the families on whom they called; had their jokes, mild ones of course, with the younger members; drank a glass of schnapps, and perhaps broke a smaller or only cake, or ate some spiced bread, and on departing left a small memento of their visit in the hands of the serving-maid that stood at the door. Could these simple citizens but wake to life and see how their descendants spend the first day of the year they would certainly be something more than astonished. The smart carriages, dashing horses and liveried footman that convey our jeunesse dorée on their New Year's visits would strike them as evidence of our wealth and luxury, but what would they think of the tables set out in some of our fashionable houses; of the pâtés, the jellies, the cakes, the flowers, the silver, the glass, the wines and liquors, in contrast with their own plain tables and simple fare? We don't know, and, therefore, we will leave some one else to answer the question.

Today will be spent in this City and Brooklyn much, we suppose, as other New-Year's days have been spent. Our young friends of the stronger sex will, ere this, have made out the list of families whom they intend to honor with calls. They will have selected the companions whom they intend to take with them, for they never, by any chance, go alone; half the pleasure of a visit would be lost, in their estimation, if they did so. They will also have selected the habiliments in which they purpose to adorn themselves, comprising their shiniest hat, tightest pair of boots, best padded coat and most delicately-tinted gloves, and if they intend to do the thing in style, will of course have spent their week's salary in changing a bank for the occasion. On the other hand, our friends of the gentler sex will also, of course, have selected their toilets, with the mysteries of which we will not interfere, and will have decided whether their smiles shall be graced by golden sherry or sparkling champagne, or ambrosial punch, or all three, or none, and let us hope that they will come to the latter decision. Let them place no temptation in the way of their visitors, or shall they escape calls from half-tipsy young gentlemen, and save much glass-ware and furniture from destruction, to say nothing of stains on silken dresses or velvet carpets. As a further inducement to them to forego the practice of supplying potables of an intoxicating nature on this day, we can assure them that it is no longer fashionable, and that our first families will this year honor the custom by its breach, and not by its observance.

It is said that the practice of making New-Year's calls is fast dying out; that "the forward flowing tide of time" is gradually swallowing up this, as it has many another old custom, and we have no doubt that many families, whose incomes are not equal to their wants, would gladly dispense with the trouble and cost of providing the refreshments which visitors seem to look for; but the man who does not keep open house on New-Year's Day is looked upon as somewhat stingy and close-fisted. Yet it must be allowed that theax upon the purse, the patience and the time of those who do observe the old custom, and who are beset by numerous callers in something fearful to contemplate, and there seem to be but little doubt that a few years hence the custom will have fallen almost, if not quite, into oblivion. However this may be, our young friends will, we am quite sure, make their usual number of calls today, and though the clerk of the weather seems to promise us a fine day, but, in fact, speaks of "south-easterly winds" and "cautionary signals," yet we will hope for once that he is wrong, and that the New-Year may come to us brightly and smilingly.

Business will be entirely suspended. The Post-office will be open for an hour or two in the morning, and also the Custom-house for the clearance of vessels. All the United States Courts, and offices connected with them, will be closed, among the office of the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court, which is required to be open on the first Monday of every month by a rule of the Supreme Court. All the civil and criminal Courts will be closed, with the exception of the Police Courts, which will be open until noon. The Coroners' office will also be open until 12 o'clock. The new Common Council will assemble in the Governor's Room, ceremoniously, and then adjourn. The newly-elected Judges of the Civil Courts will be sworn into office and Gen. Rozet will assume the duties of Registrar. The Mayor will send no message to the Common Council this year, believing, as he remarked a few or two ago, that "dying speeches are always regarded with distrust." At the City Hall there will be no reception. The Mayor "doesn't feel like it," as may well be supposed, and the keeper of the City Hall, Mr. Rogers, will forego his purposed reception on account of the recent and sudden death of his brother-in-law. In the new Court-house, Sheriff BRENNAN and County Clerk LYONS will be on hand from 12 to 1 o'clock, and welcome all who feel disposed to drop in. Neither Mr. TWEED nor Mr. CONNOLLY, we are informed, will hold receptions.

New-Year's in Brooklyn.

Yesterday was extremely unpleasant for the last day of the year, but notwithstanding this fact, some of the churches in which watch-meetings were held were well attended. The Young Men's Christian Association held special services, commencing at 9½ last evening, which were conducted by Rev. Dr. PEATTCOST. Watch-meetings were also held in the De Kalb-avenue Methodist Episcopal Church; the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church, at which a discourse was delivered by Miss SARAH FINLEY, of the Society of Friends, at the Washington-street, York-street, the Centenary and other Methodist churches.

This morning the business of New-Year's calling will be commenced at an early hour, and continued without intermission, regardless of the condition of the weather. Extensive preparations have been made by the ladies, and many of them have determined to refrain from presenting their friends with intoxicating liquors or wines of any character. On Saturday the postmen were kept busy delivering cards of gentlemen who have adopted this method of paying their respects.

Among the official receptions today are those of Ex-Mayor KALBFLEISCH and Mayor POWELL, at the Mayor's office. The visitors will consist of the personal and political friends of both, who will doubtless be agreeably entertained. The Controller elect and the Auditor elect, Messrs. SIMONDS and SHAUERMAN, will receive at their offices during the hours of 11 and 12. Sheriff WALTER will entertain all who may call upon him at the jail, and expresses the wish that he may never be called upon to receive them in his official capacity. The Police force will be on duty all day to take care of those who may be overcome and unable to take care of themselves. It is hoped that there may be no disorder of a serious nature, and that the guardians of the peace will deal gently with the erring.

New-Year's in New-Jersey.

Business will be generally suspended, today, in the cities of New-Jersey, and the usual customs will be observed. The newspapers give notice that they will suspend publication, and the banks and public offices will be closed. Last night the Methodist churches held "watch-night" services. At the Wayne-street Reformed Church, Rev. P. D. VAN CLEEF, D. D., preached his twenty-second anniversary sermon. Services were held in churches of other denominations suitable to the occasion.

NEW-YEAR'S EVE.

Seeing the Old Year Out and the New Year In.

The practice of seeing the old year out and the new year in is one more devotedly believed in by children. For being sent to bed punctually at 8 o'clock on ordinary occasions, they look forward to sitting up late as one of the most exquisite of pleasures. It need scarcely be stated that their elders by no means share their sentiments, and when they yield on New-Year's Eve, make a sacrifice of their own feelings which the youngsters cannot comprehend, and therefore are by no means sufficiently grateful for. For they sit cheerlessly in the half-warmed rooms, endeavoring to pass away the hours in sprightly conversation, while sleep sits mockingly on their eyelids and woos them to the rest that custom will not let them enjoy. Generally, cards supply the place of conversation, and the excitement of a few rubbers kills the tyrant Time, until the chiming of the bells tells that the old year has expired.

But yesterday was Sunday, and no such resource was practicable. The children, spite of every device, were compelled to fall asleep on sofas, and nestled in easy chairs, after exacting a promise from older sisters and mammas and aunts that they should be awakened faithfully five minutes before the all-important time. The seniors being bound by their promises could not possibly indulge in a little nap, and so were compelled to suffer all the pangs of weariness and ennui. Few thought of all that had been since the year. A bright and radiant being came from the bosom of chaos and old night to rule the world. Fewer still pictured all that may be with the incoming lord of the seasons, the youngest child of Time. The moralist and the sage have ever chosen the ending of the year as a subject to point a moral and to inculcate a truth. The preachers of the day echo the thunders of their teachings; and as they review the story of the past, beckon their hearers to brighter paths and nobler times. But despite all this, New-Year's Eve has ever been looked upon as a social festival, and the gloomy words duty and reflection find few welcomers. It is an opportunity of flirtation nobly embraced by the young, and it is the precursor of those calls which satiate the vanity of the fair.

SYLVESTER ABEND.

New-Year's Eve Among the Germans.

Among our German fellow-citizens the advent of the New-Year was duly celebrated in customary manner by a variety of social festivities and pastimes, including soirées, balls and musical entertainments, for which extensive preparations had been made by the numerous vocal and musical organizations. New-York Sing Academie, a leading German vocal organization, composed of gentlemen and lady vocalists, had a sylvester soirée dansante at the Germania Assembly Rooms, which included a drawing for prizes, which were distributed among the ladies, who fully enjoyed the occasion. The vocal society Uhlandbund was engaged in similar festivities at its hall, Nos. 17 and 19 Essex-street, which was fully decorated for the occasion, and illuminated with a huge lighted Christmas tree.

The Rothmannner Liederkranz was engaged in an entertainment at its hall in Fourth-street, for which a rich programme was presented, including vocal and musical exercises. Company I of the Ninety-sixth Regiment, Capt. SCHWINDT, gave a military ball at the Teutonia Assembly Rooms last night, which was largely attended by members of the different militia organizations. The Grand Lodge of the State of New-York of the order of Harugari, gave a ball at the Walhall, in Orchard-street, last night, at which there was also drawing for prizes.

The Beethoven Maennerchor gave a soirée at its splendid club-house in Fourth-street, which included a prize distribution among the ladies. The New-York Maennerchor was engaged in an entertainment at the hall of the Lese Verein, in Third-avenue and Fifty-fifth-street. It terminated in a ball, which was enjoyed until a late hour. Similar festivities had been arranged by a number of other minor organizations, and by many private parties. The places of amusement along the Bowery and the avenues, the Atlantic, the Bowery and the National Gardens, Concordia Hall, in Avenue A, and other localities, were largely attended in the evening by pleasure seekers, listening to the musical and histrionic performances, which are usually given on Sundays under the name of "sacred concerts." In the meantime the German churches were largely attended by the church-going portion of the German public.

Colored Watch Meeting at Shiloh Church.

"Freedom's Watch Meeting" at Shiloh Presbyterian Church (colored) at the corner of Prince and Marion streets, last night, was a jubilee worthy the occasion. From 8 o'clock in the evening until after 9 the services consisted of the customary prayers, preaching and singing. Afterward the hours until midnight were occupied by many prominent speakers and the sweet songs of "the Jubilee singers of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn." Rev. HIGHLAND GARRETT, Mr. WHITE, of the Fisk University; AARON M. POWELL, Rev. Mr. MINGINS and others were among those who addressed the meeting. Every subject of interest to the colored citizens of the land was discoursed on. The labor of educating the emancipated slaves, the necessity of obtaining the passage of a liquor prohibitory law, the true status of men and other topics found favor with the orators, alternated with pleasant plantation melodies and sacred lyrics until the hands of the clock pointed to the last moment of 1871. A large congregation was delighted, and went home when it had fairly started.

Watch-Meeting at St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church.

The watch-night meeting of the St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church was largely attended. The meeting was opened by a sermon from the pastor, Rev. L. S. WEED, followed by prayer and singing. Several persons were received as members of the Church, and a large number of persons converted. One, a gentleman eighty years of age, addressed the congregation, related some interesting stories to the congregation, and the last hour of the old year died away amid an exciting prayer delivered by an old lady who was converted by the prayers of her grandmother.

STATISTICS OF THE OLD YEAR.

The Business of the Civil Courts During the Year 1871.

Although, with but one or two exceptions, the clerks of the civil State Courts have not yet made up their usual statements, yet it may be generally asserted that the business of those Courts during the past year has not, either in the numbers or importance of the cases disposed of, equaled what had been done the previous year. A very large number of suits involving conflicting rights between wealthy and powerful corporations, which had largely occupied the attention of the Courts during the preceding year, had either been settled or carried to higher Courts outside of the district. Whether for the weal of the community or not, it has been a general complaint among members of the Bar, that during the year just closed legal business was on the decline. This is doubtless due, in some degree, to a growing disposition among business men to submit questions of commercial dispute, where abstruse principles of law are not involved, to arbitration, rather than incur the delay and expense incident to litigations in Court. The Bar Association, at its inception frowned upon not only by some members of the profession, but also by some members of the Bench, has within the past year ripened into a solid and influential organization, not only exercising a wholesome power for good to the Bar, but also presenting a strong barrier to corruption on the Bench, and to improvident or unwise legislation affecting the public interests.

During the year, the number of divorces entered in the Courts has been unusually large, exceeding largely that of previous years. Nor were they of the class known as fraudulent divorces, which have perceptibly decreased, but, so far as appears, rested on unmistakably legal grounds. This speaks rather unfavorably for the condition of public morals; but it may be remarked that the parties obtaining such decrees in the Courts of this City are very rarely found to be among those of recognized standing in the community. On the contrary, by far the greater number of them are persons belonging to the lower order of society, generally engaged in disreputable pursuits, and on whose consciences the marriage obligation, as all others, sits lightly indeed.

The popular upheaving which in November last routed and dispersed the leaders of the corrupt City Ring seems not only to have accomplished its purpose there, but has shed a wholesome influence over the administration of justice in the Courts. None familiar with the current business as transacted from day to day can fail to perceive that a respectful deference to a just and discriminating public opinion now characterizes the acts of some of the Judges, where heretofore contemptuous defiance was not even sought to be concealed. Two Judges of the Superior Court, both above reproach personally and officially, leave the Bench with the termination of this year, to be replaced by two others of ripe scholarship and unsullied reputation. In the Marine Court, Judge ALLEN gives place to Judge SPAULDING, while Judge BARRETT ascends the Bench of the Supreme Court, in the room of Judge SUTHERLAND. Excepting these changes, in the matter of organization, all the civil Courts will begin the New-Year as they end the old.

So far as reports of the number of cases disposed of in the different Courts during the year just closed have been prepared, the following is the result: In the Supreme Court, Part I., 128 cases were tried, each before a jury, and 10 without a jury. There were 201 inquests, 22 cases dismissed, and 19 referred. Total, 371.

In Part II. of the same Court, there were 164 trials before a jury, and 11 without. There were 60 inquests, 22 dismissals, and 5 cases referred. Of the 164 jury trials had in this last branch of the Court, 104 were before Judge BRADY, 48 before Judge VAN BRUNT, and 12 before Judge SUTHERLAND.

In the Marine Court, General Term, there were 216 appeals from judgments at Special Term, 69 of which were affirmed and 47 reserved. The total number of judgments entered during the year was 3,856; number of summons, 3,344; warrants, 284; attachments, 225; jury cases, 161; non-jury cases, 479; motions, 5,641.

The Superior Court and Court of Common Pleas disposed of their full share of the year's business.

Marriages, Births and Deaths of the Past Year.

DR. CHAS. P. RUSSELL, Register of Records to the Board of Health, and his deputy, Dr. J. F. HAGER, have prepared a report of the vital statistics of the past year, from which we obtain the following interesting facts and figures: In January, February and March of 1871, there were 6,865 deaths, 540 still-births, 1,799 marriages and 3,619 births. In April, May and June, 6,027 deaths, 393 still-births, 2,328 marriages and 4,371 births. In July, August and September, 7,261 deaths, 503 still-births, 2,139 marriages, 3,438 births. In October, November and December, 5,339 deaths, 561 still-births, 2,270 marriages, 3,793 births. Making a grand total for the year 1871 of 25,493 deaths, 2,037 still-births, 8,486 marriages, and 15,764 births. Nature's laws show that as a rule the births exceed the deaths, yet in consequence of the concealment of many of the former this does not always appear. The first quarter of the past year shows the deaths recorded exceed the births by 1,468. In the last quarter the excess was but 61.

In the month of July we find the largest number of deaths, 7,013. November appears to have been the healthiest month of the year, as only 1,824 deaths are recorded. December is the most prolific month, having 1,949 children. April seems to have been the unproductive month, as it has the least number of births, 1,290. The favorite nuptial month was September; in it 901 marriages took place, while cold, blustering March was discarded by Hymen as much as possible, only 528 couple having mated. Three mothers appear to have been blessed with triplets, while one hundred and fifty-one women had twins.

NEW-YEAR'S SERMONS.

Church of All Souls—Discourse by Rev. Dr. Bellows—Review of the Year.

Rev. Dr. BELLOWS preached, yesterday morning, at All Souls' Church, on the subject of the closing year. He took for his text, Hebrews, first chapter and part of the twelfth verse, "For thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail." After a powerful introduction, he said: Yet, broidered on the shining scimitar of the year, there is always a new damask, a new pattern, shaped on the bright steel forged by the Almighty hand out of blood and tears and human lives. Every year is a sword just like the one that preceded it, but the damasking is different. Each one has a new legend—that of this year is stranger in foreign lands than in our own. In these consolidated times, however, all nations live in and for and by each other. Said the Roman poet, "Nothing that is human is foreign to me," and it was true then he thought. We here in America are interested in whatever is happening in the habitable world. We stand up by the side of that Prince-appointing Prince who got worse when his doctors said he was going to get better, and who became convalescent when they said he was going to die. We thrill as England thrills, we sorrow for France and exult with Germany. We cannot help making the hero, but he fills our streets with his funeral. And when DOLLINGER protests, our pulpits passionately echo back his protestations. Yet have we had our own events of importance to mark the receding front of 1871. First I name the Treaty of Washington, of the highest importance, not only in its settlement of contested, but in its magnificent promises of good to come. Two great nations jealous of each other, and watched by the lurid eyes of other peoples, agree to settle their differences by a Court of Arbitration, and the Commissioners appointed on each side vie with each other in splendid courtesies. Such a noble act places them at once in the van of progress, because they conquered those feelings of pride that heretofore have arrayed embattled hosts against each other and covered fair lands with blood and rapine and the flashing breath of battle. It is, perhaps, the inauguration of a new policy. We have seen, it may be, the last of the "last reason of kings," and have gazed for the last time upon war's horrid front. May it be so; may the time have come when every nation shall have the dignity and the elevation of thought to settle their disputes in a similar way. The second event which is dumbfounded on the human blade of the nineteenth century is the burning of Chicago, a dreadful occurrence when lurid flames lighted up the fronts of every other city in the world. The extraordinary conditions under which we live in 1871 made a solidarity of sentiment a possible fact for the first time. Not for the first time, indeed, have great sorrows brought forth great charities, for such is the inevitable law of the human heart, alike in every age. But here the burning no sooner happened than it became known throughout civilization. Far off India and the isles of tropic seas heard the news and wept over the miseries of Chicago. No sooner had it become known than a rush of charity came from every quarter and rolled on to Lake Michigan and the ruined city. This union was one of mere sentiment, it may be said. True, but it was more than that. Providence leaves very few of our duties to the operation of mere sentiment. He mingles usually an alloy of self-interest with our finest feelings. Everybody smarted at the burning of Chicago; everybody had something the loss—fewer homes, more to be fewer greenbacks, fewer alms of bread and better prospects. Changes in ashes, and meals were scanty there. To some life may depreciate the value of the charity. To me it does not, and I spy more hope in this community of interest than in the community of sentiment which has been so lauded. The third event which has happened during the past year is, to me, the most striking, the most memorable, and the most deeply impressive, because it pertains absolutely to American life. It was simply the question whether the ballot-box should be stuffed or not, but on that hinged the future of our country. It was not a mere matter of political aspect, nor was it publicanism, or rather Republican institutions which were at stake. A knot of men had banded together, had seized upon all the avenues of power, had gained the treasury, and were executing an injustice that was magnificent in its proportions. Public life had become in New-York a matter of diamonds, theft, champagne, and courtesans. It was the "Black Crook," it was the beggar's opera in real life. The publication of the records of the Controller's office awoke that public feeling that had slumbered for years. A tide of patriotism rolled in upon the gutter and washed them as high and dry. Bug were were responsible for these men's crimes and their thefts? No, the educated classes; we, the thinking; we, the reasoning men, who knew all along that these men were thieves, and were spending ill-gotten gains in the same manner that Dick Turpin spent the purse he took on Bleak-heath. They fooled and flattered them, but they never deceived us. We know from the first what they were, but now the eloquent revelations of a leading newspaper for the rumors of their robberies, that were thick as leaves in Vallombrosa, see our knowledge of these men's lives, and of their healthy disgust, wants nothing in our minds until the TIMES thrust long columns of figures before our eyes. Then came the resignation of public life. The preacher then resumed his power, and in the conviction that our hearts be addressed were not altogether lost, we may assure the ex-members of the Ring, and reasoned that the citizen must never be lost in the merchant of the banker or the administrator. For these three things that we have received from the year we owe the deepest gratitude to our Almighty Father.

Sermon by Rev. George H. Hepworth, Pastor of the Church of the Messiah, Corner of Thirty-fourth-street and Park-avenue.

REV. GEORGE H. HEPWORTH, Pastor of the Church of the Messiah, corner of Thirty-fourth-street and Park-avenue, discoursed yesterday morning on "The Old Year and the New," selecting his text from the thirteenth chapter, tenth verse of Exodus, "They shall keep their ordinances from year to year." He observed that among civilized and almost most of the uncivilized races, it had been the custom to watch the departure of the old and to greet the coming of the new year with festive ceremonies. We, too, observed the custom, with kindly feelings of respect and affection; exciting loves are continued; old feuds and quarrels are forgotten, and, leaning in the spirit of the season, hope is general peace and good-will. To the American people this festival is singularly significant. The character of our people incline them to rush and hurry, and they are worn out from intellectual exertion. The great purpose of our merchants and business men seems to be to outstrip each other in the race for fortune—to compress sixteen hours' labor into twelve hours' actual employment, and to ignore everything but the acquisition of wealth. The hurry and strife of everyday life begets an indifference to morality and virtue; and, solicitous only for success, it frequently happens that we totally ignore the relations of right and wrong. Our business energies should never be so ardent as to render us forgetful of our consciences; the latter should ever be the controlling and directing power. Temptations always finds an easy prey in the impetuous and unthinking, and success is often accompanied by regret as a departure from virtuous principles. But the season for the correction and improvement of the moral character had now arrived. Each one should look back upon the record of the past year and see what he has done. There are faults to rectify and eradicate, improvements to be made, virtues to be cultivated, and a general standard of moral excellence to be laid down. The dawning of a new year was a fresh epoch in our lives, and should be regarded as another station to halt and review the past. He exhorted them to profit by its experiences, and to enter upon the New Year with renewed determination to do more for the interests of Christianity and humanity.

Discourse by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.

Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM preached, yesterday morning, in Tremont Hall, on Sixth-avenue, between Forty-first and Forty-second streets, his subject being "Looking Backward." There were times, he said, when it became us to pause and take note of profit and loss, and such a time was the closing of an old year and the beginning of a new. To look back equably and thoroughly, we should know everything that transpired, and to make a wise prophecy, we must draw correct impressions from what has gone before. The retrospective and prophetic were apt to be governed by feeling, sentiment and emotion, rather than by the judgment. We send regrets back and desires forward. We look back through emotion, fear and disappointment, and forward through fancy and hope; hence delusion wraps the whole subject. The traveler in the East o'er the desert wastes looks forward, and sees shining towards him but sand discovery lakes, and, looking back, he sees the lakes as covered o'er which he trod but halt an hour before, and found it naught but sand. Similar illusions are thrown over both the past and the future. Until recently it was the custom to locate what was termed the Golden Age somewhere in the past; people thought men had lost nothing. But it was all a dream. Those who worked hard looked back to a time when they suppose there was no work; and those who bore heavy burdens to a time when men must have been burdenless and happy, when they lived not by the sweat of their brow, but plucked the spontaneous fruit which grew around them. But history has resolved the old world into its elements, and found it not so very desirable a place. Now we turn to the future. If there is any one thing certain it is that the past is all we have—all knowledge, all experience, toil, and suffering. We know what the past is; the future is a dream. What is to come we conjecture, the past we know. Today home, neatness and truth have in no degree diminished in the world. But let us take a brave, manly look at the past years. They are crowned all over with bright halo, favors and hours of delight. In the past are all the joys that made our youth so beautiful. They are pictures in memory, now to be hung up in the galleries of the heart. Who shall say how much of the sweetness of our natures is due to the hours of delight at home. We also have our hours of hoping and fearing. All who had youth have had sorrow. All who have dreamed a dream have had their waking disappointment. But how many of those sorrows have been overgrown by the luxuriant growth of the heart. Some have floated away in the sunlight, others changed into patience and satisfaction. By looking at the bright side of life we see they were messengers of good, then we may well bless them. Some look back on errors that leave their mark on all the rest of life. Men make mistakes that tell on all their future. If we have committed such, let us look them in the eye. We may not be able to repair them, but we may avoid them in the future. If we cannot improve them to our own good, we may improve them to the good of others. And, after all, there is not much cause for regret, for we are in the hands of God. Perhaps we could not have done much better, for the conviction cannot be avoided that there is an act which controls all human actions, and it is not for us to reflect on the Universe or indulge in fruitless regrets. At the moment we do our best, and the Eternal Lord takes care of all the rest, and converts it into good. The one thing thing that an American should do is to look back into the past, reverse and despise it. To him it is full of errors and superstitions, which should be forgotten, if not obliterated. Yet the American, above all, should worship the past, for he is the legitimate product of the past. We are rapidly learning that we are all related to other; age follows age, one event all bound by inscrutable wisdom. Of all that we have today, both in arts and social organization, we can find the origin in the long past—in the history of England, of Rome, of Greece and Asia, in times when men laid down their lives for the one-hundredth part of what the humblest man now enjoys in comfort in Christendom today. The people of this City have just cast out the ruffians who put their hands in the public Treasury, and they have done a great work, but they would not have done it if it had not been attempted again and again before them. Did not England, generations ago, bring even her aristocrats to the block for their crimes? We were early on the subject of slavery before American lips were opened, and the status of women was solved in long ages past, when, enjoying more than they seek today, they were leaders in arts, physicians, prophetesses, heads of Governments and leaders of armies; then, indeed, they exercised a power of influence more than the feminine virtues. The problem was then fully solved—solved often in blood and tears. Yet are we making headway. The coral still grows, the universe matures. Man is improving. The dream in the laboratory of the past is now at practical work in the field. What was done by dark cloth-bound conspirators in the past is now accomplished by the people in open day, openly announced by discussion in the public journals and the force of public opinion. The world keeps growing in knowledge, and that knowledge is being constantly, practically applied. The better the old time is studied the less men believe in it; yet, in the past, progress has a noble guarantee for the future. There is constant change, but through all all the tendency is to a better position in the way. In conclusion, the preacher referred to the society of free religionists whom he addressed, and in that, also, found additional evidence of progress and high hopes of the future.

The Protestant Reformed Church Services—Addresses by Rev. Drs. Adams, Cheever, Rogers and Mr. Gamse.

An unusually large congregation assembled last night at the Protestant Reformed Church, Fifth-avenue, to participate in a special service appropriate to the close of the year. A large number of clergymen were present and delivered short addresses and prayers. The pastor of the church, Rev. Dr. ROGERS, introduced Rev. Dr. ADAMS, who said: What I hope to say that will be most appropriate and most to our profit on such an occasion as this? There are many purely sentimental thoughts suggested by the close of the year. I might tell you how the dying year reminds us of all the lessons of our life, of our perished hopes, our wasted efforts and baffled ambitions, of our children, our bright youth, our manhood and gray age, that crowns with our second childhood is laid to rest. I might tell you of the great changes that have been wrought in the past year. I might tell you how this day results to us these great and honored names that during this year have passed from the world's history. After all, this is the time to ponder upon the past. I cannot think they would be of great profit to us now. Supposing we were this night closing our lives, instead of but one year, the most appropriate name we would wish to hear would be that of our precious Savior, who brings to us forever, when for the sake of the root, and hopes of life in the bright future. Do we keep this one great fact constantly before our minds? Do we remember that our days are arched by the bright bow of promise, and that if we love and live for the glory of our Savior and our God, the sins of the past year, even the remembrance of the years of our life, seven Pentecostal days of the dispensation of twenty years, would result in the great sum of our years, and we ask ourselves the night how have we availed by our great opportunities of salvation? But it is no great comfort for us to look back upon our past sins; we have the greater joy of looking forward to the glorious redemption that is promised to us. We have gone to the tomb of the slain this night but that Jesus came into the world to save sinners, and that God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son to die for us, that whosoever believed in Him should not die, but have eternal life. Let that be our comfort to-night, for that is the comfort I should give you were you gathered to the tomb of renewing your life by another year. I shall know I have given to you all the true words of science if, when you go to your beds this night, you remember that it is not even then too late to commence your lives in the merciful God who has spared you for another year.

Rev. Mr. GAMSE next addressed the congregation, and said: At common times, appeals such as the one we have just heard might be without effect; but on this night, when the worldliness of the past has ceased and that of the future has not yet begun, let us hope that this may enter deep into our hearts. Let us trust it may wean us to examine our past lives, and show to each of us that which is radically wrong in us. Is it the neglect of your religious duty that is destroying your hopes for the future? Would you have it cured? Then turn to Christ, where all our sins are washed away. He will give you repentance for the past, and the dying year of 1871 may yet be looked back upon as the year of your Christian birth.

Rev. Dr. CHOBBY next spoke and said: How shall we be happy next year? By spending it with Jesus. Have we spent the last year with God? Have we followed him during our past lives? Remember there is such a thing as following him from afar off. The tendency of all in this life is to slight the commands of God and to impair our consistency. There is no peradventure in the promise of Christ—there is no exception in that. There are three words, faith, hope and charity; and what have we done with these glorious words? We have made faith but an intellectual separation, and charity we have reduced to mere alms-giving. But faith is that means confidence, and charity means love. Now, do we, the sons of God, act as the children of the Most High? Is it not possible to abide under the shadow of the almighty wings? When the good Samaritan succored the wounded man, he not only helped and aided him for that hour, but he also furnished him with ample provision, by giving him the means of subsistence until he should be well again. So our Lord and Savior has by His wonderful providence not only died to save us, but has made full and ample provision for our future lives, if we but live for and believe in Him.

Rev. Dr. ROGERS was the last speaker, and said: Life is a journey. If so, we have now come to a resting-place. Where are we going, and what is to be our destination? Traveling through the State of New-York was attracted by three different groups seated in the same car with myself. One was a poor lunatic, under the charge of friends, whose destination was Utica. Another was a manacled felon, surrounded by officers, whose destination was Auburn. Another was a bridal party with youth and joy beaming from their countenances. When the train stopped at Utica I saw the wretched madman alight and proceed to his asylum, at Auburn the felon was carried to his gloomy prison to expiate his crimes, and when the train stopped at Rochester I saw the bridal party alighted. I saw an old man in the pastorate receive the young wife in his arms and musing her, say, "welcome, my daughter, to your new home." These are types of our life and its journey. We are all traveling to our destinations. Are we of those whom the Bible calls blind men in their hearts, not having given ourselves as living sacrifices to God, or are we prisoners to broken and neglected laws, or are we among those who have consecrated themselves to God, and are journeying with the light of holiness in our faces to the eternal home?

Canal-Street Presbyterian Church—Discourse by Rev. David Mitchell.

Yesterday, Rev. DAVID MITCHELL preached, in the Canal-street Presbyterian Church, a sermon appropriate to the season, taking as his text the first chapter of the Song of Solomon, and the fourth verse: "We will be glad and rejoice in thee." He said that with this language Christians should close the year and every day of the year. Many objected to religion that it was sad of countenance and that it separated them from all true enjoyment. In reply to this, the preacher described the pleasures of life, showing how fleeting they were; how, after the gratification of the senses, the stinging of conscience was left behind. Those seekers of pleasures brought many a pang to the hearts of their parents and friends. The next point was that though the Christian life necessarily denied itself such personal pleasures as did not derive balm from religion, yet it did not end. Christ was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Yet his noble, disinterested and consistent life was telling upon the ages. Though St. Paul's was not a life of pleasure, it was a noble and genuine life, leading men to God and holiness. In the highest sense the Christian was called to rejoice, for he was delivered from sin; he was engaged in an ennobling service, and had glorious prospects before him. On these accounts his soul well might be happy. In concluding, Mr. MITCHELL wished his congregation a happy New-Year—a new year of increase of life, of work and hope.

CHICAGO'S OFFICIALS.

Four Aldermen Indicted by the Grand Jury—The Investigation Still Going on.

From the Chicago Journal, Dec. 29.

This morning the Grand Jury concluded the investigation of the charges of crime against two members of the present Council and two Ex-Aldermen, and returned to the Criminal Court four indictments—one against Alderman JAMES J. MCGRATH, one of the notorious "nineteen" in the old Council, and a member of the present Council; one against Alderman GLADE, of the present body; one against Ex-Alderman MONTGOMERY, who was also identified with the infamous "nineteen," and one against Ex-Alderman WALSH. The indictments set forth that these men are guilty of bribery, corruption and malfeasance in office. It is said that the bail of Alderman MCGRATH will be fixed at $5,000, and $2,000 each will be the amount of the others. It is rumored that two indictments were found this morning against MONTGOMERY, and that his bail will be fixed at $8,000 in each case. The news of the indictment of these men, although not unlooked for, has created no little excitement throughout political circles. The Grand Jury are still at work ferreting out and examining into additional cases, and to-morrow we may hear of four or five new indictments. Subpœnas have been served on many prominent citizens, and there is no doubt but that the jury will probe to the bottom of the slough of corruption in which the public officers of the city and county have been wallowing so long. Some of the officers from various departments have been summoned to appear before the jury already. This morning subpœnas were issued for Deputy Superintendent WELLS BRIGMAN, Capt. GEORGE MILLER, of the Second Police Precinct, and W. S. GOLZER, Ex-Liquor Inspector.

Alderman MONTGOMERY appeared this morning as counsel in the habeas corpus case, before Judge ROGERS, which was tried in the room adjoining the one in which the jury are sitting. He either was not aware of the action of the jury, or exhibited the most sublime indifference to the affair, as all his remarks indicated to him utterly ignorant of the fact that the prison-door is unlocked, and that a felon's cell may ere long be his resting place, should the charges made against him be proved on trial. It is re

AN OLD NEWSPAPER.

A Retrospect of New-Year's Day, 1772.

If one can indulge in anything like a meteorological retrospect, it must have been bitterly cold on that New-Year's Day, just one century ago. News from the interior of the province had been withheld for the last ten days, and Philadelphia intelligence was over five days coming to New-York. There had been heavy weather, with violent snow-storms, and New-York merchants suffered notably, for during the last week of the year THE two sloops and a ketch were lost in a violent storm on the Sound. The patrons of THE NEW-YORK JOURNAL AND GENERAL ADVERTISER take advantage, however, of the cold snap, for JOHN SIEMON, a furrier, with a big cut of a muff and boa, which Mr. G UNTHER of today might want to copy, informs the public of his presence in this wise: "I, John Siemon, just arrived from London with muffs, tippets and ermine, now worn by the ladies of the Court of GREAT BRITAIN, therefore flatters himself to meet with a favorable encouragement by the LADIES and others, as he intends to stay a month only in this city, which shall be gratefully acknowledged." Social distinctions were then very manifest. LADIES being honored with capitals by the printers, while others had to be contented with the more commonplace type. In looking over this paper one hundred years old, one even feels an interest in the ebb and flow of the tide, which has so long ago been swallowed up in the great sea of eternity. On January 1st, 1772, it rose at 7 minutes before 7 o'c., and fell 27 minutes before 8 o'c. The good cheer of the time finds an advocate in one Robert Hoakley, on Broad-street, opposite his Excellency General Gage, who announces a quantity of good Coffee, a quantity of excellent Port Wine, in bottles, Cheshire Cheese, and Ben Kenton's best London Porter. Good old Ben Kenton! There is still something jolly and rollicking in the long-lost name of this compounder of liquids, possibly as dear to our forefathers as Bass or Guinness to the generation of today. "Ho, Sarah, a frothing can of old Ben Kenton's!" we cry in vain to some shade of a long-past-away pot-boy. Abell & By Vanck, at the sign of the Spade, near Coentis Market, Albany Pier, have just imported by the ship Friendship, Capt. Lewis, from Bristol, an extensive collection of goods. They are large merchants, for they use a whole column of the journal. Old New-York annals say they both lived to a green old age, and died before the period of advertising agents. What a heterogeneous medley of goods they offer. They have nails, allum, brimstone, fiddles and fiddle-strings, leaf-gold, bird cages, with argol, gunpowder, pumice, swan-shot, emery, tea-kettles, and wind up with looking-glasses from $11 to 24, each. Thomas Pearsall, the dry-goods man, and haberdasher, offers on that 1st day of January, 1772, stuffs and fabrics, now worn so threadbare by time's abrasions that even the shreds of their names have almost been lost. Here you can find your Barcelonas, your wide and narrow Persians, Callimancoes, Dorsateens, Sickenays, Shalloons, Mecklenbourgs, Peelongs, Sarnets and Tiffanays. Here your comely matron can purchase Minikin pins, (whatever they might be,) the best London Pewter dishes, and here, too, the beau might buy their Barlow knives. John McGibbon, an enterprising publisher, informs New-York that for New-Year's his works of Josephus will be forthcoming for 7 shillings, Pennsylvania currency, per volume, whereas they cost 12 shillings in England; he also wants subscribers for the ROYAL SPIRITUAL MAGAZINE, and says: "Gentlemen who are willing to encourage literary manufacture, and will be pleased to exemplify it by reposing their names as yearly subscribers." He describes it in this way: "Every pious observation has been cropped to render the whole a Flowery Path of blessing to the Reader." Sam'l Loudon is another book-seller. His collection may be described as solid. The lightest literature is Rheinfadt's "Conversations between a Christian and a Convert," and sundry knotty confessions of faith. As pieces de resistance, you have Mr. Hume's History of England, Milton, and Dr. Johnson's Dictionary. Hayman Levy, of Bayard-street, rallies the public, too, calling them, in large capitals, "to take notice that he has a choice parcel of Beaver and old Coat, (here it loses its modern Chatham-street flavor,) raccoon skins, which can be had very cheap with other Bargains." Did you want to be a linguist just one hundred years ago? Here is a certain Daniel Jacquerl, who proposes to teach grammatically French and Spanish, at your own house. Somebody has lost a silver chain, with a brass key and a gold seal cut with three bears' heads, and offers a reward for it, and there is Hendrick Rutzer's horse, too, with a star and blaze on his forehead and a snip on his nose, who has strayed away. Some gay gentleman, maybe a roystering one, on the Christmas night, careless from too much nrrack punch, has lost his Portuguese cloak, between Smith-street and the Exchange, and is anxious to get it back again.

A small quota of news sufficed the readers of January 1st, 1772. The Harriet, packet from London, has brought it all. As a grand sensation they read with gusto of an attempt to assassinate the Marquis of Pombal, Minister of Portugal, which important event happened just four months before. Late Russian news have they too, of July. It is very timid, and couched in exactly the same language as a Gortschakoff would use today—simply satisfactory, and meaning precisely nothing at all. We give it in extenso: "Notwithstanding the expenses of the present war are prodigious, yet they are far from being burdensome to the people, who contributed nothing (blood and lives, then as now, counting for nothing) of their own thereto. The method of negotiating money, the spoils taken from the enemy, and the contributions which the Imperial Armies draw from the conquered provinces have sufficed and are still sufficient for defraying the whole expense of the war. Moreover, the plague at Ratisbone, which carried away 1,700 persons in twelve days. But from Venice comes the astounding news that a Renegade has bruted it about that the grand vizier Moldavangi Bassa, Commandant of the Dardanelles, (there is a grand melodramatic name whereby to hang a romance,) has sold his story of the Rose and the Ring, that the before-mentioned Moldavangi Bassa "has had his head cut off because he had not promptly paid off the troops in his command." How the coy maidens of a hundred years ago must have sighed when they thought of the untimely end of this dreadful Turk. Here is an item which foreshadows the wine trade of the United States; the writer only anticipates events a century or so. "Claret, Burgundy and Champagne, which now sell at prodigious high prices in this country, are to be raised in as much perfection in the British territories of the Mississippi as in any part of France, and could be sold at a shilling a bottle to the people of London, when a settlement once is established in that part of the world by our government." Perhaps the editor wanted to be particularly kind to a friend of his in a neighboring State who has just been married. He announces it, therefore, in this way: "We learn from New-Jersey that on a New-Year's Eve Captain Jack Howard, a lusty, well-made young fellow, was married to Cynthia Stockton, a young lady possessing all the Qualifications so essential to the happy Conjugal state." Even though a century has passed since then, one can't help offering with the editor our sincerest congratulations. There is about one joke in the paper, of a very quiet nature, a reflection of a brilliant family of Jewish descent, Wit. Either from having been so long crossing the sea, or because a hundred years have dulled its point, we confess to have been too dull to comprehend it. Undoubtedly it was very droll and funny in that New-Year's Day of '72.

1772! Then reigned great George III., and the Pretender, the old Chevalier of St. George, had been dead but seven years. Lord North was Minister. Reynolds was in his prime, painting portraits at 200 guineas a head. Garrick, too, was playing, thinking, though, of his retirement, which followed some four years later. William Whitehead, a name now utterly unknown, was a fluid hunker and drinker, as England's Poet Laureate. The great Watt, then, was but 36; had taken out his first patent just three years before. With his position of Amos, grand old Samuel Johnson was taking his long holiday, and Bozzy was assiduously cultivating an acquaintance with him. Gemmy Garrick, fourteen years at the zenith of his fame, his famous comedy of "She Stoops to Conquer" receiving its finishing touches prior to its production on the stage. As for music in this year 1772, they had many and many divine inspirations. Arne was alive, and Gluck and Handel. Mozart, too, was just commencing to awaken the world with the grandest of all strains. Cook this very year, in the ships Resolution and Adventure, sailed in search of the great Southern Hemisphere.

Louis XV. was King of France, and for three years the fair yet frail Marie Jeanne Gomard de Vaubernier, the Du Barry, then but 25, held him enslaved. Recklessly was she squandering his 180,000,000 of francs, now thinking of the sharp guillotine, ready to sever her old head from its once comely shoulders. Voltaire was still alive, and so was Rousseau—both dead to die two years later. Napoleon was then but a baby in his third year, cutting his teeth. Frederick of Prussia was in regnum. The Seven Years' War had been over a long time, Prussia was retrenching, and her Frederick was setting her an example, wearing his one coat the whole year. At home, though the ADVERTISER talks nothing about it, New-York was discontented. Pitt, now Lord Chatham, has lost popularity, and revolt was in the air. George Washington, just a year prior, had made a long exploring trip to Pennsylvania as far as Fort Pitt, and was now at Mount Vernon, assiduously tending his plantation. 1772 was not an eventful year, yet it had within its germ of the enormous seasons yet to come. If history but repeats herself this present year, 1872 may much like its elder brother, lose dead and passed away one hundred years ago. And so—THE ADVERTISER has in conclusion the following to say:

"We wish our customers a happy New-Year."

Though almost hidden away, set up in the most minute type, doubtless it was kindly meant. Copying then somewhat our old predecessor in bolder character, we continue the refrain, and say, "To one and all a happy New-Year."

CHICAGO.

Holiday Celebrations—Singular Scene—Some Statistics—Miscellaneous in the Matter of City Criminals and Their Sentences—Wonderful Escapes.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Monday, Dec. 25, 1871.

The holidays are observed with us on a scale scarcely to be anticipated, in view of what we are accustomed to call our "overwhelming calamity." If you could look upon the quantity and variety of costly presents which changed hands this morning, you would be far from inferring that the people of Chicago had met with very severe losses. All the jewelers' shops, the toy-shops, and everywhere holiday goods are sold, report trade greater than ever. And all sorts of extravagance and luxury seem to flourish as much as ever. Many it is true, cannot indulge as freely as in other days; but expensive goods, such as were untouched last year, find purchasers now. In view of all this extravagance, which has been announced in the daily papers, it would be the most natural thing in the world for those abroad, who are laboring for what they supposed to be a suffering people, to stay proceedings, especially as most of those who are thus engaged are less able to help us than our own citizens are to help themselves. The whole civilized world is providing for our sufferers—even for our ordinary charities, for the support of those who have not suffered by the fire—while we are spending our surplus in show and display.

We have, according to our own claiming, 300,000 inhabitants who were unscorched, directly by the fire—whose houses were untouched. We are doing, probably, a better and larger business than any other city out of New-York, on the average of the population, and, we can, as a city, or as individuals, afford to help ourselves, as well as other communities can afford to help us. For instance, the fire inflicted a loss of about $6,000,000 upon Connecticut, through its insurance companies; it bankrupted many of her citizens; it took the living away from many of her people; yet, the Relief Committee report that Connecticut has sent us $60,000, while Illinois, including Chicago, I presume, has contributed but $45,000. I believe in helping ourselves, especially as we are so able to do it as any other community; that is, those who did not lose by the fire should be as liberal with those who did, as are our friends abroad. But we don't seem to think of this. As an example, the citizens of Buffalo send us many thousand dollars in money and goods, and the Common Council votes an additional one hundred thousand. We have ruined about all her insurance companies, and inflicted large losses in other ways upon her citizens. The Common Council of the 255,000 unburned-out people of Chicago have not voted a penny for the relief of her own sufferers. I think it is beneath the dignity of the great "commercial emporium" of the North-west to be placed in such a position; to beam of her extravagance and luxury, and waste, and allow poorer communities to feed and clothe her destitute people.

The past has been a week rather memorable in the criminal calendar of the city. There have been three convictions for murder, and a fourth trial set agoing; and, while this was in progress, two others qualified themselves for the gallows or a life imprisonment, as the jury shall determine. The two last murders occurred in saloons, as do about three of every four which take place in our city.

Saturday was one of the quietest days that I have witnessed in this city. There were all possible kinds of weather known to the almanac-makers in the space of twelve hours, except, possibly, that of Midsummer. It was cloudy, it was windy, it was clear, it was warm and balmy as a Spring day, it rained, it hailed, it snowed, and finally wound up by a good solid freeze. The wind blew a gale a part of the time, and toppled over many of the slender walls which were hurriedly going up in the "burnt district," and destroying some completed buildings. The ground being frozen, the cellars, many of them, were filled with water, being convenient receptacles of the rain, which, at times, fell in torrents.

The buildings which are being put up are not all of that flimsy description indicated by the fate of those which were blown down. I noticed, in a ramble through the ruins on Saturday, a large number of four and five story brick edifices, with iron fronts, nearly ready for occupancy. It is expected that the business of the south side will go toward the south branch of the river. FARWELL & Co. and FIELD & LEITER are located, with their large wholesale houses, west of Fifth-avenue, or Wells-street, within a block of the river. The consequence is that real estate has advanced in price rapidly since the fire, in that part of the city. It has been selling or is held at from fifty to one hundred per cent higher than on the 1st of October. An effort is being made to have the Post-office and other Government buildings located three blocks west of the old site, on the corner of Monroe and Wells-street. And as the FARWELLS, one of whom is in Congress, own a large property in this vicinity, it is thought that the project has some chance of success.

The "Mayor's bill," as it is called, has passed the House of Assembly, but does not go into operation until the 1st of next July. A bill known as the "Ohio law," relating to liquor selling, has passed the House by a decided majority. It makes the liquor seller—as he ought to be—liable for any injury or damage arising out of his business. It is intended principally for the protection of the wives and families of drunkards.

The Apportionment bill is making fair progress. The majority of the Committee reporting it have shown more wisdom and regard for what is right and just than is usual on such occasions. They have opposed gerrymandering, the making of districts to favor the interests of party or of individuals, further than is legitimate in regard to the former.

The committee appointed to ferret out the charges of bribery and to bring the corruptionists to justice, if any are found guilty, are busily at work, while the Grand Jury is delving away in the same mine.

The small-pox is prevailing here to a considerable extent, and fears are entertained that it may become epidemic. Everybody is holding out his left arm to be vaccinated, and the doctors are driving a large business. Somebody is busily spreading the idea through the papers that the virulent type of small-pox prevalent in our own institutions is a recent affair, and that it is necessary to repeat the operation every few months even. Scarlet fever, too, is quite prevalent, and proves very fatal among the children in the barracks where the homeless sufferers by the fire are herded. Aside from these, the general health of the city is good, though you would add that typhoid fever is of frequent occurrence, and quite a number of deaths are constantly occurring from it.

The Relief work is still going forward, we about the same scale as before reported. About sixty-five thousand people are receiving aid, wholly or partially. The Society reports seven hundred people employed in the work, and that the cost of administering the relief will be about $235,000—rather a large percentage. A large number of the "sufferers" are doubtless better fed and clothed than they ever were before. Molly are idle and drunken, and put clamor for relief and get it.

TALKING TO A GIANT.

The Trials of a Soldier—How the [illegible] Altitude of Seven Feet Performs in Search of a Dwarf.

"Professionally," said the giant, placing his cane on his crown and his hat, described circles there in a peculiar tambourine-like manner, (he would have been forced to stoop considerably to have put his hand on our shoulder,) "professionally the life is not such an arduous one. To look the part is the thing. It isn't a strut or a swelling of oneself out that does it. I have seen lots of giants that had the pompous parade manner, and never amassed as much taller by it. A peculiar lofty expression, and a looking into distance is something. My pose is natural, perfectly so, because it is myself alone, and no mounts are met to be angled. Sometimes, however, it's very trying on my nerves. I am afraid I am getting rather shaky that way. To be constantly associated with a brass drum and a brass band is shattering my system. I am on friendly terms with every body, excepting with that band-master. He knows I am the attraction of the place. A giraffe or a hippopotamus may carry public opinion with them for a while, but it's certain to come back to me before long. Why is it, then, when forced to make my grand entree, why is it that, instead of low music, melo-dramatic like, he always will insist in coming down with a crash of sound, so as to swallow me in it, dim my effects, and absolutely diminish my size, from the want of a musical contrast? I have complained time and time again to the management about it, and it won't interfere. Now, I leave it to you, Sir, if an entree with drums and cymbals wouldn't be just the thing for the dwarf, and make him look smaller, while something smooth and soft for me would make me look bigger? There is just one point where the public and the whole concern," here he swayed round a huge arm, like a wind-mill, over the audience, animal vans land all, "are mistaken. They think because I am the biggest man alive that I have no heart or sentiment?" Here he smote his breast with a thud, which resounded like a catapult against a stone bastion. "I, tell you if my outside is large, my heart ain't in proportion. It's as much bigger than my body. That leader is my mortal enemy, with his obstreperous music, and if it wasn't for a friend of mine as that orchestra—the flute, that little man in the second row, with the green spectacles on—I would have cut the whole concern, big drums, trombones and all, long ago." Here he perfectly quivered with rage; he felt it from the way our hall was vibrating. "That flute," went on to say the colossus, suddenly changing to a sentimental tone, "with the fawn, the dog in the happy family, and a pair of doves, are my only true friends here. If this show ever breaks up, I have made up my mind to buy them; get the flute to come and live with me to play for me evenings, and so end my days. There is another delusion the public labors under, which I am anxious to enlighten them about, and it is regarding our feelings about dwarfs. We are supposed to be jealous about them. That is all nonsense. Mostly they are very little children when they come into the business, and despite the tricks they are taught, and the way the ladies spoil them, I never know a case when they didn't kind of love and look up to a giant. I have been associated with them all my life, and I know all their ways. When they get a little bit old, say in their teens, a kind of uncertainty comes over them—life gets kind of hazy like. It would be their ruin professionally if they grew any. It's touching to see them measuring themselves all the time on the sly. There was one little chap I traveled with, is was about fourteen, and was uncommon small. He was always bothered with the idea that some day he would wake up the sixteenth of an inch taller. He never had an ache in his little finger that he wouldn't be all over of a trouble, thinking it was growing pains. Often he would come to me and ask me, on honor, if I didn't think that he looked as if he was a going to grow. Somehow or other I noticed he was always a sidling up to me, and measuring himself on my leg. I had a dara somewhere on my trouser-leg, just where the gold stripe came, above my ancle; he would stretch himself up to that, that was his notch. I suppose if he really had shot up a whole foot I would not have had the courage to tell it him. We giants, you know," here he smiled in a condescending manner, "can never be afflicted in this way. We can't grow less, only more. In fact," here he became more confidential than ever, and whispered in our ear so loudly that he blew our hat off, "I have hopes of growing still. If it was but half an inch more, I could dictate my own terms to the management. But that poor fellow, the dwarf, eventually did break his heart, and all through a mistake. He got himself a new rig, and as proud as could be, he comes to me to show himself and to be admired. If a dwarf has a fault, it's that of being vain. He comes to me, measures himself, and I noticed him turn pale. The top of his head was just a hair-breadth above his mark on my leg. I saw him kind of stagger. He was took poorly that very day, and never was himself after that. It was all owing to his boots. The simple shoemaker had put high heels on them, and that was the reason. But the shock was too great for the poor man, he lost all confidence in himself after that, and took to drink to great and liquor that we had to discharge him."

"You have no difficulty," we inquired, "in getting engagements?"

"None in the least. The day I was as tall as I am now I was professional, and I have never been idle since. Some people here and abroad have always disputed about my height. You see, I am a sure thing, and the main-stay of a show. They note the giant first, and builds up on that afterward. Yes," he added, then suddenly paused, and heaved a sigh convenously deep, "all the world wants me alive." Here he ceased drumming on our list, which was a pleasant relief. "But what is very, very hard, some people are after death."

"How is that?" we asked, amazed.

"Skeletons," briefly replied the giant with a shudder. "It is hard, and it's that which is disturbing my existence and making me wretched. Ain't it enough that I am delighting and astounding a critical public every day, that they must be cracking after my death? A reputation such as mine, I know, must exist in all times, and I have already a biography out with cuts which must forever preserve my memory."

"Pray explain what you mean!" for we were quite touched at some hidden emotion of the giant.

"Why, it's just this: This morning at the matinee, a party comes to me out of the audience. He was dressed in a kind of seedy black, with a white cravat on. He had been watching our dwarf closely, and I noticed him consulting a memorandum-book. After a while, kind of disappointed like at the size of the dwarf apparently, he came to me. I always am polite to visitors. A true artist can never be indifferent as to applause. I knew he would be amazed with me, and so he was; but he kept bothering me with no end of questions, such as the public have to pay, and how much I eat, and what food I ever have pains there, and how much my pulse beat, and other things of the most searching kind. He asked me my height. I guess it to him—professionally. I fancied he had a measuring-tape in his pocket. I saw he was up to it kind of bodies. He wanted me to stand up against a wall, lest he should spoil the place and measure it for himself, when I wasn't near. I had made up my mind he was in the exhibition business and wanted me. I asked him, 'Was he in that line?' He kind of smiled and shoved his card into my hand, and went off. Finally he said he, 'Look here, my friend, you are the subject of my life. I am professor of osteology—that's bones, you know—in the highest college out West. An opposition concern in the States, of no standing, is drawing all our students from us. They are always bragging about their collection. They have a dwarf there, and I, Sir, am no humbug about it—that's the largest in the world, and they advertise that far and wide.'

"'Alive, sir?' I asked.

"'Not a bit of it,' he replied, with a laugh. 'I mean to take the shine out of that concern, we determined cost, what it may, to have the biggest specimen on record. Now I hope you wouldn't mind it a bit, if after a while all alone and polished, elegantly prepared, you were an infinite source of pride to us and the institution in a neat glass case, with your name and age and size and weight, and a little plate underneath, that's what he called it) if he down cash, and a thousand when you—shun—you know.'

"What! dead?" we gasped.

"Just so; will close the negotiation I'm ready now with the amount, and we can draw up the other necessary papers right off," and he smiled worse than a hyena. It is a hard world on us, I tell you, the most flattering tribute I could say to your size."

"Ah!" said the giant to me, "I knew he was sincere, for I have had the same things offered to me time and time again; it was one of the penalties of my professional life, and one that is hidden from the public, and shows that there is no position in life, be it ever so lofty, that is not liable to the dark side. The cravings for bones after death you can understand, though the way it is to be done, I am sure, is one of the reasons why my nerves are gone of the best."

"Then the hand struck up a royal march, and the giant descended from the stage, with the feathers of his military hat, and seated himself upon the rear of the exhibition stage. He took a kindly leave by the hand. "It is my turn to go on now," he said. "Come and see me again. It is so rare to find true sympathy, that I am always glad to see you. Is not that pane they are playing dreadful? It is more than ordinarily jarring to my nerves today." Saying this like a second St. Christopher, he strode across the building, and the crowd made way for him as the waters was divided in the pleasant old legend. Presently we heard a superb bow to an overwhelming bell-day audience. As we were leaving, the dwarf, another friend of ours—young, but sharp beyond his years—blocked the way.

"What has that big baby been saying to you?" (Evidently he was referring to the giant.)

"Only some of his tricks," we replied.

"Big as he is, he ain't got no sense in him. Never knew a giant as had any. Why, the dwarf as was here before me used to most bully the life out of him. Sometimes he gets jealous of the elephant. Why, I can turn him round my little finger. What an audience can see in that man to make such a fuss over, I can't imagine, for the life of me."

THE HOUSE OF ORLEANS.

A Dynasty that is Coming to the Front—The Romantic History of the Family—The Men Who Propose to Profit by the New Commonwealth.

People are notoriously given to making exceptions in favor of themselves, and it is commonly said that before going into battle nearly every man thinks that he himself will escape. We opine that a similar sentiment influences and fascinates competitors for the throne of France. LOUIS XVI. died on the scaffold. EGALITE ORLEANS, father of LOUIS PHILIPPE, met a similar death. LOUIS XVI. died in prison, his death, by common report, being accelerated by privation. NAPOLEON I. died a prisoner in a remote rocky fastness. His son, the Duke DE REICHSTADT, King of Rome, as he had been proudly dubbed by his Imperial father, died an exile, dependent upon his mother's family.

LOUIS XVIII. is the only sovereign of France who has died in office since the revolution. From the tone of their Press on that occasion the ignorant might have imagined the French to be the most devoted of subjects. "How glorious, how holy, is the agony of the most Christian King. Monarchs of the earth come and learn to die. Sorrow is spreading among the people; the father of the family is dying—weep all, weep. A new reign approaches; the noble son of FRANCIS—the model of honor and loyalty—is called to the throne. Frenchmen let us console ourselves," and even M. DE CHATEAUBRIAND published some unutterably absurd rubbish in like vein. Six years later the French had "consoled themselves" by getting rid of CHARLES X., "the model of honor and loyalty," in a very summary manner, and he too died in exile. LOUIS PHILIPPE died in exile—NAPOLEON III. is an exile at this moment. In less than eighty years France has seen all these changes. Indeed, men have died within the last decade who heard MALESHERBES plead the cause of LOUIS XVI.

What a history it has been! Can that of any other country present a period of the same length so replete with public and private agony? Yet those who have sat in fair France's high places, do not appear disposed to abandon for a moment their struggle to retain them. The Comte DE CHAMBORD, we are told, will never abandon his claim. LOUIS NAPOLEON, we may be equally sure, is as determined to pursue his machinations for the same end, and the members of the House of ORLEANS have just been agitating for seats in the Assembly, and interviewing President THIERS thereanent, which looks as if they, too, had high hopes.

It is not a little troublesome to keep our courant with the family history of foreign Princes, and possibly some of our readers may not be familiar with that of the ORLEANS family. The house is a younger branch of the BOURBONS, springing from LOUIS, Duke of Orleans, son of LOUIS XIII. by ANNE of Austria, and only brother of LOUIS XIV.

The son of the first Duke of ORLEANS was the notorious Regent of France during the minority of LOUIS XV. This Roscoe was great grandfather of the equally notorious EGALITE, father of King LOUIS PHILIPPE; and it would be hard to say which of this precious pair of that Monsieur's ancestors was the most utterly despicable. Undoubtedly these two wretches did their best to pave the way for the calamities destined to befall their ill-fated descendants, and, with the exception perhaps of the BONAPARTES, it would be difficult to find a family whose career has, since 1789, been more sadly checkered. While the sovereigns of the House of BRUNSWICK, on a throne only a few hours distant from the French capital, have succeeded each other in regular rotation, just as an English squire steps into the old mansion-house at his father's demise, the members of the House of ORLEANS have literally at times not known where to lay their heads. No romance writer, unless indulging in the visionary flights of DUMAS, could invent a tale in which the hero would experience more extraordinary reverses than the history of King LOUIS PHILIPPE presents. Cradled in the lap of the most luxurious society that modern history has recorded, then an exile, the son of an executed parent, who had justly merited his death on the scaffold; then a wanderer far and wide, seeking a livelihood in our own cities, earning a scanty subsistence in New-York and Philadelphia; one of the herd of needy adventurers who land daily on these shores; making so the story goes, overtures of marriage to an American, and being told by her father that in his then condition he was not a good enough match for his daughter, while, if he ever regained his position, she would not be a good enough match for him; and then, a few years later, returning in splendor at the Tuileries, and enjoying the most splendid private income of any monarch in Europe. Eighteen years after the incident, a gentleman, a passenger on board a steam packet, plying between Havre and Southampton, received application to convey a party to England. He consented. The party to be conveyed arrived at Havre in an open boat from Honfleur. The express stence put to sea, and on a chill morning in February, they reached Southampton. Upon the shores of Sussex an elderly gentleman, with curious pear-shaped head, dressed in a rough pea-jacket borrowed from the Captain of the Express, wearing a close blue cloth cap, and saving round his neck a common red and white neckerchief. His appearance was not rendered more prepossessing by a beard of apparently a week's growth. He was accompanied by a party of distinguished men, whose features were carefully concealed by a think veil. The newspapers they been gave their names as Mr. and Mrs. Smith. They were, in truth, Ex-King LOUIS PHILIPPE and his Queen, MARIE AMELIE.

Their son-in-law, the late King of the Belgians, presently placed at their disposal that charming retreat, which has been the scene of so many royal joy and sorrow—Claremont, in Surrey, where the Princess CHARLOTTE of Wales, the nation's fondest hope, had breathed her last, after passing a few months of unalloyed happiness, and where Lord and Lady LYNDHURST lately spent the first blissful days of their honeymoon. This haven the old King never reached, and here he passed a peaceful life away. Since then exile his sons have been scattered. The Duke of MONTPENSIER, who married the sister of the Spanish ISABELLA, of Spain, has resided almost entirely in that country, while the Duke D'AUMALE has made himself quite an Englishman. Since his death he has acquired a residence in Worcestershire, and, Prince greedily given to hunting, took the hounds there, and has been one of the most popular men in the district.

By the will of the last Comte, the ill-fated (for he hung himself) father of an ill-fated son—the first MARGUERITE, victim of the Duke D'Enghien—the Duke D'AUMALE inherited Chantilly and other large estates, and is extremely wealthy. When, after the revolution of 1848, the Orleans estates were subjected to a forced sale, the Duke, through Messrs. COUTTS, the great London bankers, bought in the estate in their name, and he now enjoys the revenues accruing, and has lately sent for his hounds from England, and is following with ardor that sport for which Chantilly, in the days of the CONDES, was world-famous. He bears the reputation of being an accomplished, able man, and is a thorough good fellow to boot, but, as he relies for himself, he has no sympathy with the ambition which has proved disastrous to so many of his race.

If an ORLEANS is once more to assume the chief place in the Government of France, the Duke D'AUMALE is the best man, but his doing so would cause no great heart-burnings in the person of the nephew of Count DE PARIS, unless that Prince should choose to withdraw all claim.

That the younger branch of the Bourbons should, any more than the elder, desire to set on that Democratic throne, the French throne, is, to men [illegible] a great, the French throne, is, to men [illegible] with ordinary sense, not uncertainly.

MONDAY, Jan. 1—A. M.

The NEW-YEAR promises well for the General Trade of the Country, though we can scarcely hope for the same rapid progression over the previous year as 1871 exhibits over 1870. With the drawback of a European War, the business of 1870 showed an increase of about 7½ ₱ cent. over 1869. During the year just closed the increase over 1870 has been nearly or quite twenty ₱ cent. We have authority for this estimate in the figures (all official except for December) of the Foreign Trade at New-York. Including the semi-official weekly returns for the last month, the Imports into New-York are 25 ₱ cent. greater than for the previous Calendar Year. The Exports of Domestic Produce are 18½ ₱ cent. larger, and the Exports of Gold and Silver 11 ₱ cent. larger. The Customs Duties deposited at New-York show an increase of only 10 ₱ cent., but these being under the revised Tariff, averaging 40 ₱ cent. ad valorem, and the deposits of 1870 under the previous rates, averaging 45 ₱ cent., the comparative result shows that the increase in the actual consumption of Foreign Merchandise keeps pace with the enhanced gross Importations. And it is gratifying to believe that this increase is not out of proportion to the increase in the vaster products and manufactures of American Industry.

The Government Finances for the year past show an improvement, both in the liquidation of $90,000,000 of the Principal of the Public Debt and in the reduction of $7,500,000 per annum in its Interest charge, which sufficiently accounts for the enhanced Gold value of the Public Funds. The 6 ₱ cents, (6-20s of 1867,) which stood at the beginning of the year at the equivalent of 97½ ₱ cent., in Gold, closed on Saturday at the equivalent of 103½ ₱ cent., in Gold, while the 5 ₱ cents have advanced to within a fraction of the par of Gold. These results are to be succeeded, early in the New-Year, by the payment of $40,000,000 of 6 ₱ cents of 1862 out of the accrued and accruing Gold surplus in the Treasury.

In the last half of the Old Year the general financial situation was seriously compromised by the exposures of the length and breadth of municipal corruption in this City, by the Chicago fire and its consequences to the insurance and other important interests, and by the demoralization of Southern State credit. Nor have these drawbacks been so far corrected or overcome as to render the opening prospects of the New-Year all that could be wished for financially, or all that might be deemed consistent with the encouraging hopes of trade, referred to above. In saying which we are aware that the (immediate) ruling spirits on the Stock Exchange, and, probably, a majority of our banking authorities, take a brighter or less qualified view of the future. It is not to be concealed, however, that the recent warnings to our Savings system, to the Fire and Life Insurance Companies, and even to our National Banks, have not been without their significance. The Savings Banks for example, after being recklessly used and abused to cover the multiplication of City and County debt, and thereby the robbery of the tax-payers, were barely saved from the great peril of loss of popular confidence by the change, at the critical moment, in the Controllership. This fortunate event averted utter bankruptcy from a very large share of the investments of savings. Whether this and other dangers are wholly past, or whether the managers of the Savings Banks and the Insurance Offices mean to improve the warnings—which we fear they have not yet done—are questions left to the new Legislature at Albany, and to the reports and investigations into the true condition and security of these concerns, as conducted in New-York and Brooklyn, which cannot be ordered too soon. The duty of the Legislature will extend to other important reforms and to the overthrow of the disgraceful Erie Ring, and while we have no serious doubt that all these interests will enlist early attention, we cannot feel sure, until more is known of the organization and material of the Legislature, that the good work will ultimately be accomplished.

The weekly averages of the Associated Banks, Local and National, reporting through the Clearing-house for the week ending Saturday last, Dec. 30, compare as follows with the previous week, and also with the corresponding week last year. To which we add the Gold and Currency balances in the New-York office of the United States Treasury at these dates respectively:

The Bank return published this morning exhibits the relative strength of the movement in respect to the lawful money held, as against the circulation and deposits, to which we add the position of the movement the week before, and also of the movement of the corresponding week last year:

The Bank return of the week shows more steadiness of movement, and rather improved strength in the Lawful Money average to Deposits and Circulation, than for several weeks past. The Loans are down $649,000; the general line of Deposits is up $1,054,100; the Gold Notes are $2,284,900 higher; the Greenbacks $365,000 less than last Monday.

Money, after ruling stringent and dear through the week, closed at about 7 ₱ cent. to the Brokers, lenders having the advantage of three days' Interest over the New-Year Holiday.

The Import Entries at New-York, embracing foreign Dry Goods and General Merchandise, for the week past, were $4,612,151, as against $5,124,596 for the corresponding week last year. The Exports of Domestic Produce, other than Gold and Silver, were $4,048,804, against $4,468,815 same week in 1870. The Export of Gold and Silver, $449,406, against $464,908 same week in 1870. The Customs in Gold paid into the New-York Office of the United States Treasury for the week were $1,788,508. The receipts of Cotton, coastwise and by rail, 20,507 bales.

The Gold values of the Import entries of Foreign Merchandise at New-York, exclusive of Foreign Specie, for the calendar year 1871, are as follows, the figures being official to Dec. 1, and since semi-official from the Custom-house:

The sales of Gold on Saturday were at 109 @109⅛ ₱ cent. The market steady, with an inclination among some of the operators to speculate upon a partial, if not decided, January rise. The Foreign Exchanges close 109⅝@109⅞ ₱ cent. The Public Funds very firm, and the prices, measured by Gold, the highest of the Old Year. The 5-20s of 1867 sold at 116 ₱ cent., and the new 5 ₱ cents at 109½ ₱ cent. The Railways were unusually strong, and at rapidly advancing prices, so was the Stock of the Western Telegraph. The Central Pacific Mortgage advanced to 103, and the Union was in demand, and sold at 74 ₱ cent. The prices of the day were strongest after the Boards, and closed as follows:

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ REINVESTMENT OF DIVIDENDS, INTEREST AND CALLED-IN FIVE-TWENTIES.

During the first three months of 1872 there will be disbursed for the redemption of Five-twenties, interest on the United States, Central Pacific and other Bonds, dividends on stocks, &c., not far from $150,000,000, a considerable portion of which will seek reinvestment.

Government Bonds at present market prices (estimating the length of time for which they are likely to run) yield but little over 5 per cent. on the investment, and it is now apparent that no higher rate of interest can hereafter be derived from investment in our National Securities.

The amount of really first-class and absolutely safe six per cent. Gold Bonds, which can now be had at anything less than par, is very limited. Prominent among them are the SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS OF THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, which we offer and recommend, believing them to be as safe as the Bonds of the Government. Less than $2,000,000 now remain unsold, and they will be rapidly taken up.

Present price 94, and accrued interest. Interest and principal payable in gold in New-York City. Interest May 1 and Nov. 1. Denominations, $1,000, $500 and $100—coupon or registered.

Upward of 300 miles of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad are now completed and equipped, and the remainder will be finished within a few months; when we believe these Bonds will take rank in market price with the CENTRAL PACIFIC, now, and for a long time past, above par, and current in all the money markets of the world.

We buy and sell, as usual, GOVERNMENT and CENTRAL PACIFIC Bonds, and receive them in exchange for CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO Bonds. Accounts of Banks and others received, on which we allow interest at the rate of four per cent. Orders for Investment Stocks and Bonds executed at the Stock Exchange.

☞ THE GROWTH OF THE UNITED STATES RAILROADS AS CREATORS OF NATIONAL WEALTH.

The remarkable growth of the United States in material prosperity has been a favorite theme with American and European statesmen of late years. The wonderful increase in our foreign, domestic and internal commerce within the space of twenty years is without a parallel in the history of any other country. In 1852 the entire foreign commerce of the United States was $212,808,806, and in 1871 the total was swelled to $1,092,997,948. These figures indicate plainly the increasing commercial importance of the United States among the maritime nations of the globe. The foreign commerce of Great Britain is estimated at $3,000,000,000, and that of France at $1,600,000,000. The United States in its foreign commerce now ranks third among the civilized nations, and it is only fair to presume that in a few years our country will outstrip France, and rank second. The domestic or coastwise commerce has also greatly increased within the same period of twenty years. The internal commerce of the United States carried by railroads alone presents an increase from 1850 to 1871, twenty years, which is not only marvelous but almost incredible. In 1850 the value of the merchandise tonnage of all the railroads in the United States was SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLIONS OF DOLLARS, and in 1871 the value of this tonnage was ELEVEN THOUSAND MILLIONS OF DOLLARS. In 1850 there were 12,906 miles of railroad in operation in the United States, and at the present time about 53,000 miles. The great increase in the commerce of the United States—foreign, domestic and internal—has been brought about chiefly by the development of the great resources of the country. Railroads have been the great means of developing these resources, both agricultural and mineral; and any one who will carefully study the figures of our foreign and internal commerce, noted above, and then compare them with the increased railroad mileage of the country, must see that this great increase in national wealth, and commercial prosperity can be credited mainly to railroads. Great as is the present railroad mileage, it is nevertheless too small for the actual wants of the people. This want of new railroads is particularly felt in the matter of trunk lines. What the people need is not so much local roads, but more lines from the sea-board to the interior, and also roads which will materially shorten existing trunk lines. Conspicuous among such new railway enterprises is the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD, from St. Joseph to Fort Kearney, now rapidly approaching completion. A part of the road has been in active operation for some time past, and the business of the line has demonstrated its complete success. The saving of distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts will be very great by this road, which must attract to it a large through business. The Company has a grant of 1,600,000 acres of fine rolling prairie lands in Kansas and Nebraska. The mortgage prohibits the sale of these lands at less than four dollars per acre, and the money derived from land sales is used by the FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY as a sinking fund to retire the bonds of the Company.

We are now offering the remaining balance of the 8 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS OF THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY, WESTERN DIVISION, at 97½ and accrued interest in currency. Both interest and principal are payable in gold, the interest in FEBRUARY and AUGUST, free of tax. The bonds of the Eastern Division were originally marketed by our firm at 97½, and are now quoted at 101½ to 102½ and accrued interest, equal to 104½ to 105½. We commend these facts and figures to discriminating investors, who, no doubt, will fully appreciate the merits and value of this investment.

TANNER & CO., Bankers,
No. 11 Wall-street.

☞ THE WEST WISCONSIN RAILWAY IS completed to Steam, and will have cars running to St. Paul by the commencement of the coming year. This route will be the trunk line for the Eastern and Western business of Northern Wisconsin and Minnesota, as well as for the through business to the East, the line being 100 miles shorter than the present route. The state and number business of the road is very considerable, and steadily increasing, yielding sufficient return to pay interest. The Land Grant and Income Bonds issued to aid in building the Company is worth more than double the amount of the mortgage, and is held as security for the Bonds, which are payable, interest and principal, in gold, bearing seven per cent. per annum. Bonds are for sale at 90 and accrued interest in currency, by WHITE, MORRIS & CO., No. 12 Wall-st., and GEORGE N. JOHNSON & DAY, No. 16 Wall-st., agents for the Company.

BANKING HOUSE OF HENRY CLEWS & CO.,

☞ LETTERS OF CREDIT FOR TRAVELLERS, also Commercial Credits, issued, available throughout the world.

Bills of Exchange on the Imperial Bank of London, National Bank of Scotland, Provincial Bank of Ireland, and all their branches.

Drafts and Telegraphic Transfers on Europe, San Francisco, the West Indies, and all parts of the United States.

Deposit accounts received in either currency or gold, subject to check at sight, which pass through the Clearing-house as Bank checks.

☞ UNION PACIFIC BONDS.

The undersigned offer for sale, at the current market rates, the First Mortgage and Land Grant Bonds of this Company.

The First Mortgage Bonds, due 1896, bear the same rate of Interest as United States Five-twenties, (Six per Cent. gold, free of tax,) they are a first lien upon the Road and its equipment.

The Land Grant Bonds are a first mortgage upon the remaining 11,596,859 71-100 acres of land belonging to the Company, the proceeds of all sales of which are solely applied to the redemption of the Land Grant Bonds. The total sales of land to Oct. 31, 1871, were 490,141 29-100 acres, for $2,050,831 93, averaging $4 22 per acre. The net earnings for the first six months (of the third fiscal year) ending Nov. 1, 1871, were $2,400,319 94—more than twice the amount of the interest upon the First Mortgage and Land Grant Bonds, and about three times the amount of the interest upon the First Mortgage Bonds. The annual interest upon the First Mortgage Bonds is $1,254,376 gold; the annual interest upon the remaining Land Grant Bonds is $650,220 currency.

Dedication of the Cornell Memorial Schools.

Yesterday the large hall of the Cornell Memorial School in Seventy-sixth-street, near Third-avenue, was formally dedicated as a temporary chapel. In the morning Rev. THOS. GOLDEN of South Africa preached from Isaiah sixth chapter and from first to sixth verses. In the afternoon and evening eloquent sermons were preached by Rev. C. D. FOSS, D. D., and Rev. J. R. MIDWINTER. Over $7,000 was collected during the day on behalf of the City Church Extension and Missionary Society, which has borne the principal part of the expense of the buildings.

The McPherson Monument—Suit Against the Contractors.

From the Cincinnati Gazette, Dec. 29.

A petition was filed in the Superior Court, yesterday, by J. E. WALKER, attorney on behalf of W. B. HAYES, M. D. LEGGETT, and A. BECKENLOCHER, against T. D. JONES, and J. C. FIESELDEY, administrator of CORNELIUS BERGEN, deceased, alleging that the plaintiffs, in October, 1869, contracted with Jones to erect a monument to the memory of the late Major-Gen. JAMES B. MCPHERSON, and at the same time JONATHAN BERGEN executed a bond to secure $20,000, conditioned to be void if Jones faithfully complied with the contract. A site for the monument was immediately selected at Clyde, Ohio, and the foundation built. By the terms of the contract, the work on the monument was to be commenced forthwith, and was to be completed within eighteen months from the signing of the contract; but more than two years have now elapsed, and the work is not done, and JONES refuses to complete it. Wherefore they claim the contract is broken, and ask damages for breach of contract and delay in the sum of $10,000. The bond filed in May

The New-York Times,

DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the hour—uncompromising warfare against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing schemes of self-interested politicians, and its recent warfare upon the Tammany Democrats has been received with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledge given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be truly represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public reposes in it. Two out of three of the original proprietors still direct its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They purpose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and unworthy influences and cliques, and aim to represent the great body of the public, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a perfectly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with untiring energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. This department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Renewed enterprise will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the four-weekly editions; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings of the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper; all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot under any circumstances return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

To Advertisers.

☞ For the accommodation of up-town residents, advertisements for insertion in the TIMES will be received at No. 54 West 23d-st., junction of Broadway and 6th-av., and No. 1,241 Broadway, between 30th and 31st sts., at same rates as are charged at office of publication.

☞ The NEW-YORK TIMES has opened a branch office in Brooklyn at No. 44 Court-st. opposite the City Hall, where advertisements will be received until 5 P. M.

We acknowledge, with thanks, the following additional contributions for the Children's Aid Society, which has been robbed of $13,000 by the Tammany Ring, and is now in great straits for money: "Anonymous," $10; "A Lady in Dansville, Livingston County," $5; "A. F.," $7 50; "B.," $10; J. A. S., $1.

A legal correspondent points out the method by which corrupt Judges may be removed from the Bench by the new Legislature. By a concurrent resolution of two-thirds of the members of both Houses, the reform so long asked for by the public can be carried out at once. It is some years ago since we exposed the misconduct and corruption which have disgraced the Bench in the persons of two or three of our Judges, and although indictments have been presented to Grand Juries against us, and many denunciations heaped upon our heads by the Judges in question, we have seen no reason to change our opinion that the presence of these men in the Judiciary is a great public scandal. We hope the Legislature will establish a claim to the confidence and respect of the community by at once removing Mayor HALL and the notoriously corrupt Judges, and thus carry out the will of the people as expressed at the polls last November.

The admirers of Senator SCHURZ strongly protest against their hero being subjected to any unfavorable criticism. We have already explained their view—it is that Mr. SCHURZ may scatter slander broadcast through the land, but that no one must be allowed to take his name disrespectfully upon their lips. Senator SCHURZ has insinuated, in various mean ways, that the President is a corrupt man—a charge which he dare not make openly, because he knows that he could not prove it. Opinions may differ about the President's policy on various subjects, but we maintain that no one has any right to accuse him of being corrupt. Only a dishonest man would bring that charge against him, for there is not a particle of foundation for it. Mr. SCHURZ, when he goes into the work of defamation, need not complain if his own claim to be regarded as a reformer is honestly reviewed. Not a single statement we have made about Mr. SCHURZ has been disproved—but we are still open to accept any corrections which his friends may offer to our article concerning him.

The New Legislature.

The first duty of the Legislature, the meeting of which is now at hand, is its organization. Let us hope that the work will be done in a way to give courage to the friends of pure legislation, and to afford no comfort to jobbers and corruptionists. In the case of the Senate, the election of a clerk may be considered concluded in favor of Mr. JAMES TERWILLIGER. The committees will be reorganized under the rule of the Senate, which leaves their appointment to the Lieutenant-Governor only when the Senate does not otherwise order.

The Governor's message is ready, and will be promptly sent in. Our readers will not be surprised to know that it is long. Many events have happened since the Legislature adjourned, on which comment will be pertinent, and concerning which the Governor's views are awaited with interest. Mr. HOFFMAN now regards himself, we presume, as relieved of any embarrassment growing out of Presidential aspirations or prospects, and practically free from the bondage which compelled him to contradict every profession of his public life by approving the infamous special legislation of the last two sessions, especially with reference to this City and to the Erie Ring. He may now feel at liberty to indicate what steps in his unfortunate career he would like an opportunity to retrace. Nothing would help him more, in the estimation of decent men, than a frank expression of his desire to undo the miserable work he has helped do. There is no doubt that the Legislature would receive with profound sympathy and respect suggestions from his Excellency for the abolition of the machinery for plundering set up in New-York City; for the repeal of the license to mortgage the property of our citizens, known as the acts for the Consolidation of the Debts of the City and County of New-York; for the instant removal of the monstrous powers now lodged in the hands of the Commissioner of Public Works, originally devised for the profit of WM. M. TWEED, who certainly has no further use for them; for the overhauling of the various Departments of the Government of this City, to discover the degree to which the audacious aims of the associated swindlers who procured the charter have been carried out; for the repeal of the Erie Directors' bill, which the Governor can hardly fail now to see was as great a blunder as it was an offense against public morality and legislative decency; and generally for the practical remedying of that flood of evils for the existence of which Mr. HOFFMAN has been partly responsible. He has always been a plausible, and doubtless sometimes, a sincere, advocate of sound general principles. He now has an opportunity, which is pretty sure to be his last, with the aid of a really "honest Legislature," to put them into practice.

Whatever may be the Governor's course, however, neither it nor anything else can hinder the Legislature from proceeding promptly to the work of practical reform in this City, which is its most immediate and most important business. We do not join in the suggestion that the Assembly shall immediately refer the question of New-York City Government to the Committee of the Whole, and settle it in a week, before any of the Committees are appointed. We do not believe that the evils which attend the system of representative Government, have overbalanced all its advantages, and made it necessary for Legislative bodies to get back to the methods of town meetings. On the contrary, we have a strong desire to see the best efforts of the best possible Committee in each House directed to the question of what our Municipal Government shall be. We fear far less from deliberate action, or from any possible influences that may embarrass or pervert it, than from pell-mell rushing to conclusions. It will not be difficult to unearth corruption, if that be attempted, and a more unhealthy Winter than this will be for rogues and lobbyists we believe never settled on the State Capital. We certainly shall do our best to make it so, and we have the best reason to count on the co-operation of a mighty army of good citizens in the work. Let the honest men in the Legislature, therefore, go to work carefully and wisely. The people will give them reasonable time, if they show that they are making good use of it.

Facts and Merits of the Proposed Charter.

As we have stated in a previous article, we regard it as a serious defect in the new charter, as proposed by the Committee of Seventy, that the elections to the governing body of the City, the Board of Aldermen, and for the Mayoralty, are to be annual.

The most responsible and busy classes of the City, the business and professional men, can never be withdrawn from their employments for the labors necessary in such election, once in twelve months. The experience of the past shows that they have not been so, and it is not likely that they will do better in the future. An election once in three years, or in two, might call them out. They could possibly afford such an interruption; but an annual election, with all its necessary machinery and preparations, will only breed that pest of free communities, which has so cursed this City—the petty professional politicians.

These men, finding their employment furnished them regularly after every few months, will thrive on it, and live by the jobbery and peculation and trickery of politics. They will be ever more adept in it in the future than they have been in the past. Honest men, entering the field of politics freshly, and encumbered with their own affairs, will stand no chance in caucuses and primary meetings with these experienced and skillful tricksters. They will become discouraged again, and the rambles in politics, and the contrivers of new rings, will govern this wealthy Metropolis under the new charter as they have done under the old. To the busy and respectable citizen, frequent elections are a bane and a temptation to do nothing; to the manipulator of the masses, who has neither ideas nor principles, they furnish a lucrative profession. So plain is this to all who know this City, that we cannot understand so palpable a mistake in the project of so intelligent a Committee.

The future governing and legislative power of the City, on this scheme, is to be the Board of forty-five Aldermen. They will control absolutely the expenditures, and will appoint all the Commissions except those of Police, Fire, and Health. They are accordingly a far more important body than were ever the old Common Council; and yet the salary for each member is to be only $3,000 per annum. We cannot but fear that economy in public salaries will have here its usual effect. An able business or professional man in active employment could not afford to take the place, or, if he took it, would expect to make up the deficit by the perquisites of the office. The place ought to provide a comfortable support for the occupants, both for the sake of removing temptations, and of giving a higher dignity to the situation. The Board of Education, or "Department of Public Instruction," is to contain fifty-five members, which will certainly make a very ponderous body to regulate matters of such nicety as the methods and plans of popular education. These defects of the proposed charter can all, however, be easily remedied. The Legislature will undoubtedly modify these provisions while retaining the important features.

Among the good characteristics of this scheme, besides the minority representation and the publicity of accounts, which we have already commented on, may be classed all the provisions relating to the expenditure of public money. The Board of Aldermen can pass no ordinance levying taxes or assessments, or appropriating moneys, until at least two days after they have been entered upon the journal,—thus preventing "snap" measures, giving away the public property, or unjustly burdening private citizens. A vote of two-thirds, too, is required to pass such an act; and no other branch of the City Government is permitted to thus appropriate moneys, or to draw money which has not been duly appropriated. No issue of bonds, except the revenue bonds for current expenses, is allowed, unless approved by special act of Legislature. No bond or certificate of stock issued by the City is valid, unless signed by the Mayor and Controller, and countersigned by two of the Commissioners.

These are all judicious provisions, and will serve to block efforts at peculation and perversion of the City's funds. It is wisely provided, too, that no member of the Board of Aldermen shall hold any other office, whether of the United States, this State, or of the City. In like manner, every member of this Board, and of the City Departments, is forbidden to have any interest in the contracts of the City, or in any real estate of the City sold by a suit of the Corporation. Thus have the Committee of Seventy sought to throw up a barrier against the tide of official peculation and public swindling, and to guard the interests of our citizens in checking all improper use of public moneys. It remains for the Legislature to amend, improve, and then ratify this work of the Committee, and to give us for the next few years a scheme of Government which our best brains have contrived, and our most intelligent classes support. This will be an early duty in the session now opening.

The Board of Health.

The published charter of the Committee of Seventy, as we have before observed, does not definitely organize the Metropolitan Board of Health. That part of the labor of the Committee still remains to be done, and in the doing of it they will unquestionably have the assistance and advice of the best representatives of the medical profession in the City. Great advances have been made during the last decade in the direction of sanitary science, and the subject has happily gained the advantage of the most careful study of many eminent physicians and physiologists of England and America.

The Board of Health, as now organized, consists of nine persons, with equal power and patronage, viz.: Four Police Commissioners, four Health Commissioners, and the Health Officer of the Port. Four Bureaus are connected with it, viz.: The "Bureau of Sanitary Inspection," the "Bureau of Records of Vital Statistics," the "Bureau of Street Cleaning," and the "Sanitary Permit Bureau." There is no necessity whatever for uniting the Police Department with the Health Department, as is now the case. That unnatural union makes the Board a cumbersome and incongruous political machine, with many conflicting interests. It moreover places the solution of sanitary questions in the power of a majority unacquainted with the principles of sanitary science. There is no reason for making the Health Officer a Commissioner. His residence and sphere of duty are away from the City, and he is liable (as was Dr. SWINBURNE, who preceded CARNOCHAN) to be a non-resident of the City previous to appointment, and utterly ignorant of its local sanitary requirements. He should, however, be subject to the scrutiny and dictation of the Board of Health in reference to all his official acts bearing upon the public health.

If the Board of Health consist of five Commissioners, three of them should certainly be physicians of at least ten years' professional experience, and it should be essential for every member of the Board to have resided in the City for a period of five years within the past ten years.

There need be but two independent Bureaus in the Department, viz.: One of "Sanitary Inspection" and the other of "Vital Statistics." The two other Bureaus created by the charter of 1870 are superfluous. The duties of one of these officers are performed by an inspector and clerk in the Bureau of Sanitary Inspection. The chief of the Bureau of Sanitary Inspection might better be styled "Sanitary Superintendent,"—a much shorter and more distinctive title than his present one, "City Sanitary Inspector." The chief of the Bureau of Vital Statistics it would be better to call the "Registrar of Vital Statistics" instead of "Register of Records," as at present. Each of these two officers should be a physician of at least ten years' professional experience, and should receive a liberal salary in consideration of his devoting his entire time to his duties, and of his grave responsibilities. Each might have an assistant or deputy, who should be a physician.

Perhaps twenty "Sanitary Inspectors" might be attached to the Bureau of Sanitary Inspection. The present division into inspectors and assistant inspectors is manifestly unjust, as the two grades perform exactly the same duty for different salaries. Then let the City be divided into twenty "Sanitary Districts" of about fifty thousand inhabitants each, and the Sanitary Inspectors required to reside in their respective districts. These Inspectors should of course be physicians, and should not be subject to removal except for dereliction of duty.

Hitherto but little more than half the number of marriages and births occurring in New-York have been registered. The duty of returning them devolves upon ministers and doctors, many of whom are negligent, while others refuse altogether to make such returns. The registry can be made perfect in New-York at an expense of only about ten or twelve thousand dollars annually. Suppose there were appointed twenty officers, who might be styled "Subregistrars," each to have charge of a district and reside therein, and all men of known respectability. A salary of $500 each would be ample. Their offices might be designated by a sign, and should be open for registration upon, say, three days of each week, morning and evening. The public could be advised of this fact by public advertisement, and a penalty should be imposed upon each parent for failure to duly register the birth of any child within ten days after this notice. Each parent registering a child's birth should receive from the Subregistrar a document acknowledging the fact.

Each person entitled to solemnize marriages should be required to furnish the Subregistrar of any district wherein he may have performed a marriage, with a return thereof within ten days after the ceremony, and should also be required himself to keep a register in which to enter such marriages, which register should be examined by the Subregistrar at stated times. A penalty should be exacted for every omission to register and duly return a marriage.

Then let the Subregistrar make complete monthly returns to the Registrar of Vital Statistics of all marriages and births, for permanent record, making affidavit that his returns are correct to the best of his knowledge and belief.

The examination of certificates of death and granting permits for interment are very important duties of the Registrar. Being from constant intercourse more familiar than any other person with every class of practitioner, he is frequently able to detect irregularities which otherwise would elude judicial notice. He is now, however, obliged to recognize as physicians, in ordinary cases, the most ignorant charlatans, by whom thousands are murdered. This calls loudly for reform. Men not qualified by graduation from some incorporated institution should not be permitted to practice. Men so qualified should be required to deposit their credentials in the Bureau of Vital Statistics. All pretended physicians, upon being proved to have advertised by sign or otherwise, or to have professionally attended any person, should be subject to fine and imprisonment. In this way quackery and abortion would soon be almost abolished from our midst.

We have thus briefly referred to some of the reforms called for in this important Department of the City Government, knowing that our views meet those of the most enlightened physicians, and that they command the approval of those most fully experienced in the practical working of our sanitary arrangements.

New-York Society.

The opera closes next Wednesday, and from the New Year to Lent the main attention of the season will be given to the special festivities and observances of private "society." Balls, receptions, dancing parties, dinners and the like will now be frequent, and prudent anxiety will be shown to get the right people, to avoid "ineligibles," and in other ways to maintain or acquire position in the social scale. Some who have watched New-York life with care for many years, are apt to bewail what they call a decadence in the tone of society, and to believe that the good old fashioned days were better than any that are likely to come hereafter. Probably these regrets are never wholly without reason. It may be, as the elderly folks say, that social standing used to be more exactly defined; there was once, no doubt, less of vulgar display, and certainly ignorance coupled with presumption had less chance formerly than now to slip into the company of its betters. On the other hand, there is now more diffused culture, and a far greater variety and richness of color in our social circles. Society, like politics, may be likened to a rising tide. The waves now advance and now recede, but, on the whole, progress is made, and the highest point will, in due time, be attained.

It has occurred to not a few sensible people that the present time, which has brought the overthrow of what has been called "flash" politics, may also, appropriately, bring the discouragement of "flash" society. A certain pack of vulgar upstarts, who have made money by usury, by watering stocks, or by robbing the public Treasury, have gone into a kind of partnership, one object of which has been to affect to "lead" society. Various insignia, or tokens of position, are employed to catch the public eye and mislead unreflecting minds. A "four-in-hand" is one of these, and those who can show these credentials of social status. Carefully managed paragraphs in opera or race-course, balls or festivals, or silly newspapers, and a well-prompted adulatory chorus, kept up by disbelieve men about town and idle women dying to be thought "fashionable," have aided in the delusion. There are people who are idiotic enough to be taken in by the mint-stamp of the Daily Tattler, and to believe that twaddle too poor for even respectable chamber-maids really guides or impresses men and women of intelligence. By these and divers other means the parvenus have contrived to get themselves made notorious, and to persuade at least the superficial mass of the community that they are really very important personages. Let us when we come to examine these social potentates—these lawgivers of ton and elegant usage—what do we find? Well, not to be too censorious, a very coarse and very dirty kind of clay; scanty and smattering education, underbred manners, infinite self-assertion, almost absolute unscrupulousness in their dealings—especially about money. The description will apply to several distinguished "leaders" of society, and the cap may go on the heads it fairly fits. Undoubtedly, these flashy pretenders owe such coign of vantage as they boast, in great part, to the same train of causes that permitted the success of the Tammany Ring; and the analogy, if examined, will prove instructive and amusing. Just as so many worthy citizens have not had "time" to attend to civic affairs, and so allowed the thieves to have things all their own way, so leisure and thought have been inadequately bestowed on the inspection of social claims and the proper condemnation and ridicule of pinchbeck pretenders.

The number of educated and refined people in New-York, whatever may be thought elsewhere, is very great, and their power, when they choose to put it forth, is not easily to be resisted. It seems fitting that the intelligent community should now exert itself to purge society, just as it is purging Municipal politics. An unwritten Social Charter should be put in force, with the view to cast out past evils and secure better things for the future. It should no longer be allowed, tacitly or otherwise, that a man who is at heart a snob, and in manners a boor, is to be reckoned a magnate; that to keep a "four-in-hand," or a showy yacht, is a passport to all social distinction, never mind how the money was got that paid for them; that a mere heavy purse is to take precedence of brains, or public service, or exalted character, or attainments in science, in letters, or in art; and finally, that costly garments, or gaudy equipages, or the most conspicuous box at the opera, or the biggest diamonds, or the most palatial stables, or even the most frequent and most sickening puffs in the Tattler or Windbag, shall not hereafter establish a title to the consideration of decent society. There is a remarkably fine opening for a reform of this sort; and during the gay season that has begun we trust to note signs that it will be carried vigorously into effect. Revolutions do not go backward, and no one need fear but that the social revolution, once begun, will end in its way as conclusively as the political one.

Pigeon Shooting.

The practice of pigeon shooting has become quite a "rage" among those of our young men who court the reputation of "sporting" characters. And yet it is a game utterly unworthy the metal of the true sportsman. To coop up in a cage a lot of domesticated pigeons, reared in the back-yard of some City tenement-house, and then shoot at them as they are with difficulty induced to claim their freedom, would not seem to be a sport to engage the interest of sensible men. And yet that it does do this is proved by the fact that the reports of "pigeon-shooting" matches already having occurred, and to occur, occupy so large a space in "sporting" journals, and the sport itself is so popular among the diversions of a considerable class of young men of fortune and high animal spirits. In a country like ours, where recreation bears so small a proportion to hard work it would ill become us to do anything to abridge youthful tendencies to healthy exercise; but this pigeon shooting not only includes the eminent disadvantage of useless cruelty, but also offers no proper and adequate field for manly endeavor, which latter might possibly overcome, in the mind of a muscular Christian like CHARLES KINGSLEY, even the necessary cruelty involved in it.

So feeling, we fully sympathize with the movement which has been made by Mr. HENRY BERGH to stop a forthcoming pigeon-shooting match at Jerome Park. That gentleman has done a service of humanity which will entitle him to remembrance; and, if now he saves our young men from indulging in a foolish and cruel pastime, he will gain a new title to our consideration.

The pursuit and shooting of game are one of the characteristics of our Anglo-Saxon race, but to make them justifiable ethically they must have some desirable end otherwise than that of mere pleasure. The fox that our English contemporaries so resolutely hunt is really an enemy to honest barnyards, and his destruction is a contribution to the good of society; and to shoot deer, (in the proper season,) snipe, and duck, and the other eatable animals, is to aid in the supply of healthful food for the race. But those pigeons that the shot-guns of our young sportsmen bring down are usually of such a poor and lean sort that it would be a hardship even for a hungry man to eat them.

Holiday Shopping.

The streets are at all times fertile in amusement and instruction. About Christmas and New-Year's, they are especially suggestive of pleasant impressions. There are few more cheerful sights than one of our great business thoroughfares on the eve of one of these festivals. It is not alone the brilliancy of the shops, nor the multitude of gay dresses and pretty faces, that on the fine days lends them this especial attraction. But to know that of this eager and bustling crowd many are contriving not their own good, but the happiness of others, is to feel a fresh interest in humanity. For a time selfishness is put by, and a better nature deserts itself. The genial influence of the season brightens every face, and lends cordiality to every greeting. The very storekeepers seem to sell their wares as though they were giving them away, instead of charging about one-fourth more than ordinary prices. In everybody one meets there is unwonted disposition to oblige, a good-humored readiness to overlook all the usual petty annoyances of life. That is surely a laudable custom which can bring about so agreeable a change.

"To be able to bestow benefits or happiness on those one loves is sure the greatest blessing conferred upon a man," says EMMOND, in the finest of novels. A greater authority had before given expression to the same noble sentiment. To all generous natures it is indeed "more blessed to give than to receive," and certainly the pleasantest feature of this Holiday time is the custom of exchanging gifts. Whether we refer it to old pagan observances, or as one would more gladly believe, find its source in the tributes brought by the three wise men on the earliest Christmas morning, it is a practice fraught with all kindliness and cheer. In this selfish and sordid world it is well that such an impulse should come at times to kindle more generous emotions. One feels better and worthier for having indulged it. It is a pleasure, too, that scarcely the poorest are debarred from. The meanest gift may testify affection as well as the costliest. Indeed, unless in exceptional cases, a Christmas gift should please rather by its fitness than by its value. Rich presents savor less of regard than ostentation.

Not the least praiseworthy feature of a usage so charming in itself is the charity to which it predisposes all. One who has given or received some pleasant reminder of affection is sure to be more softened to the sufferings of the poor. Those sufferings will inevitably be great during the Winter, and we trust that the less prosperous among us may share plentifully in the outpouring of Holiday bounty.

MINOR TOPICS.

A good many persons would like to know when "HANK" SMITH means to return the money out of which he helped to cheat the depositors in the Bowling-green Savings Bank? Among the New-Yorkers present which he is doubtless making, could he not afford a trifle for the miserable dupes of his financial operations? Perhaps "HANK" SMITH's defender in the Commercial will vouchsafe some information on this subject.

Mr. GREELEY acknowledges the genuineness of the following, which he calls "an old private letter:"

NEW-YORK TRIBUNE,
NEW-YORK, Oct. 18, 1871.

P. Donon, Esq., Lexington, Mo.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have your note of the 14th inst. I have no doubt that the policy you suggest is that which your party ought to adopt. They should have taken up SALMON P. CHASE in 1868. Then, as the result of that contest, the return of genuine peace and thrift would have been proclaimed; that policy gave you last year in Missouri than could have been achieved by a party triumph.

You only err as to the proper candidate. I am not the man you need. Your party is mostly free trade, and I am a ferocious protectionist. I have no doubt that I might be nominated and elected by your help; but it would place me all in false positions. If I, who am adversely interested, can see this, I am sure your good sense will, on reflection, realize it. You must take some man like GRATZ BROWN, or TRUMBULL, or Gen. COX, (late Secretary of the Interior,) and thus help to purify and reunite our country.

Yours, HORACE GREELEY.

Mr. GREELEY's friends had regarded this letter as a forgery; they had deemed it incredible that the author should have been prepared to put himself quite so plainly on record. It will be noticed that, in reply to a proposition to be a Democratic candidate for President, his only objection is to the free-trade principles of the Democratic Party. He is frank enough to own his delusion that "he might be nominated and elected" by Democratic help, and intimates that, if it were not that he is "a ferocious protectionist," he would be willing that it should be so. He then recommends his new-found friends to take up some man less pronounced on his peculiar hobby, and does not deny that such a man would have his support. Mr. GREELEY is nothing if not gullible, but we had not supposed the thin sugar-coating of flattery and hypocrisy would induce him to swallow the Democracy, with their monstrous record of Knkluxism, repudiation, corruption, and general dishonesty.

The registration of deaths in this City is very imperfect, as we have pointed out in an article today; but even so far as it goes, the tale which it tells is a dismal one. During the past year 136 infants have been found dead in the streets and rivers; 351 persons met their deaths by accidents,—an enormous number, in proportion to the population,—179 bodies were found in the North, East, and Harlem Rivers, and 102 persons committed suicide. The total record of deaths by violence amounts to 1,314. It is to be observed that most of the bodies found in the rivers were stabbed, mutilated, or otherwise injured—a fearful commentary on the dark work which is almost daily going on in our midst.

If the New-Year callers only had those long-promised cabs at their command, their comfort would be greatly increased. The weather promised, early this morning, to be of the usual 1st of January kind, and people who cannot afford to pay fancy prices for carriages must be content to wade through mud and slush to perform their social duties. Gentlemen who take a pride in reckoning their calls by the hundred will deserve unusual credit today, especially when we consider that they cannot possibly give themselves above two minutes' rest in each house. Have they ever asked themselves whether their peculiar method of rushing in and out, like harlequin in the pantomime, is much of a compliment, after all, to their dear friends?

The doctrine, popular among a certain class of people, that drunkenness is a palliation of every crime, has lately had a notable confirmation in Switzerland. At Berne, not long since, a man named SIGISMUND LAFOUR was brought to trial for murdering his wife. The prisoner had been peaceable and industrious, until his wife became bedridden, when he took to drink, and soon sank into a confirmed drunkard. Then he grew morose and cruel, frequently beating the woman, until at last she succumbed under his violence. On the trial no defense was offered, except a certificate from the Communal Council of his district, that the prisoner "had always fulfilled his religious duties in an exemplary manner, but that he had a weakness for drinking brandy, which caused him occasionally to beat his wife rather more severely than a good husband should." On this evidence, the jury brought in a verdict of "not guilty," rebuking the prisoner's "weakness" only by condemning him to pay costs. So that hereafter any man in Berne who wants to get rid of his wife cheaply and expeditiously, has only to acquire a reputation for piety and a weakness for brandy, and then kill her with entire impunity.

The last attempt to throw discredit on the civil service reform is the slur cast by a pretended reform journal on the Secretary of the Treasury, for directing that the Examining Boards should be for the present selected from officers in the service. This was done because there is no appropriation to pay extra salaries. If the objecting journal thinks the work of examination ought to be done gratuitously, perhaps its editor will detail one or two of his best writers on the Custom-house to volunteer as assist the Commissioners. Or he might even be induced to lend his own time to illustrate "What he Knows about the Duties of Custom-house Officers."

The week will be marked by the meeting of the Legislatures of New-York, Massachusetts, Maine, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kansas. In Pennsylvania the Senate is "tied" between the two parties, with a vacancy to fill, and there is a possibility of a long delay in organization. In Ohio, the most lively interest is felt in the Senatorship, which is reported to be nearly settled in favor of SHERMAN. Maine is agitated by the question of disproportionate local taxes on railways. Massachusetts will find the ever-recurring problems of license and labor laws awaiting its Legislature, and will probably be called on to take action on the causes of railroad accidents, such as shocked the country on the Eastern Road last Summer.

An impulse toward reform in existing methods of legal instruction, similar to that manifested here, is now exciting attention among the London Bar. A joint Committee of the Inns of Court has recommended that, after the 31st of December, "no students shall be called to the Bar unless he has passed an examination, and obtained a certificate of fitness from the Council of Legal Education." If this recommendation prevails, the old, pleasant fashion of eating one's way to the Bar will be sadly interfered with. Probably in England, as well as in America, no harm would result from raising the standard of legal qualification. Poor lawyers make poor Judges.

AMUSEMENTS.

Announcements and Notes.

The entertainments offered by the different theatres—except the Grand Opera-house—last week will be supplied to-night and during the week. At the Grand Opera-house, "The Colleen Bawn" will be acted this evening, with Mr. and Mrs. FLORENCE in the principal parts. "No Thoroughfare" will be produced on New-day morn.... Matinees occur today at almost all the City theatres. The management of Wood's Museum provides three representations instead of two.... A new gymnast, Mr. HAWLEY, has joined the company of the New-York Circus, and makes his first impression on the audience of that popular resort to-night.... The week now at its outset will be the last during which the pantomime of "Humpty Dumpty," in its present form, can be appreciated. On Monday next a thorough "reconstruction" of the piece will be effected. A new prologue will be recited, a new harlequinade and a fresh stage-dress will be shown, and many novel incidents will rejuvenate the familiar tale. A salient feature of the play of the future will be a new scene, which the MARTENS will enliven with special performances, and to which the skating of Mr. J. E. TAYLOR will give a local coloring. At other stages of the evening, feats by the WILSON brothers, and songs and dances by the CARROLL family—three lads, whose cleverness is highly praised—will be introduced. The most attractive parts of the entertainment, as it is now to be witnessed, will, of course be retained, but numerous additions to them may be looked for, the foregoing facts constituting a very incomplete summary of the management's announcements.

New Periodical.

The City is the title of a monthly magazine which is to make its first appearance within the next two weeks. As its name would indicate, this periodical is to be emphatically a New-York "institution." Its originators and many of its contributors are connected with the various Metropolitan journals, and descriptive accounts of many of the public enterprises in which our citizens are interested, will form an important and distinctive feature in its character as a magazine. Its attractive gray-blue covers predispose one in its favor before seeing what is between them, a decision which is amply sustained by further examination. For typographical excellence The City will take a high rank among its contemporaries, and an additional merit is to be found in the adoption of the new method of photography, called "Albert-type," which in the present number has been used in illustrating an article by CHARLES SUMNER on "The Best Portraits in Engraving," and which promises to effect quite a revolution in the art of illustrating. The articles in this number are, first, a charming Christmas poem by EDMUND C. STEDMAN; "The Centenary of American Independence," by HORACE GREELEY; "Townward Tendencies," by HENRY W. BELLOWS; "The Humorous Element in American Literature," by A. R. SPOFFORD; "Water-Wen," by A. C. WHEELER, and a number of other readable articles by bright, clever writers, thus making an advent of exceptional brilliancy.

How an Unacceptable Lover was Circumvented, and the Causes of True Love was Made to Run Smooth.

From the Columbus (Ohio) Statesman, Dec. 23.

A young man named DAVIS, of good family, and said to be well supplied with worldly goods, living near Dublin in this county, made his appearance at the Probate Judge's office on Christmas, to procure a license to marry Miss COOK, living in the same neighborhood. Miss COOK not being eighteen years old, Mr. DAVIS was informed that he would have to procure the consent of the lady's parents before he could get the desired document.

It has since transpired that DAVIS was quite objectionable to Miss COOK, but that his suit was encouraged by her father, who, on the occasion, and on such persuasions as induced his daughter to accompany DAVIS to this city, on Thursday last, with avowed matrimonial designs. Miss COOK, however, had a "prior attachment" for Mr. WILLIAM W. FUSON, a worthy young man residing near Worthington, through which place the route to Columbus lay, and when stopping at the hotel there for dinner she managed to send him a note, giving information of what was going on.

On receiving the note, Mr. FUSON dispatched a friend to expostulate with the paternal COOK, and himself immediately followed the lady and the gentleman accompanying her to Columbus. Immediately upon finding out their whereabouts, he spirited the lady away, and secreted her till yesterday morning. In the meantime his friend had been highly successful in his mission, and procured a full consent to his (FUSON's) union with Miss COOK. A license was procured at once, and at 11 o'clock, at the Zettler House, Mr. FUSON and Miss COOK were made one.

DAVIS had issued invitations to a large number of neighbors to attend a party Thursday evening, in honor of his anticipated wedding. The guests were in total ignorance, but for the reasons above stated, the party was a disastrous failure.

How a Marriage Was Prevented in Vermont.

From the Burlington Free Press, Dec. 29.

A divorce suit between parties residing not a thousand miles from Bennington, was on Tuesday put over until the June term of the Court. It places the woman and young man in peculiar circumstances, as they expected the divorce would be granted, and had arranged to be married on New-Year's Day. The parties had even purchased their bridal outfit.

AFFAIRS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. Sumner and the Supplementary Civil Rights Bill.

Reform in the War Department—Mr. Schurz—Senor Lopez Roberts—Value of His Diplomatic Skill in Spain—Gold Sales for January—Miscellaneous.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—Senator SUMNER means to leave no stone unturned to secure the passage of his Supplementary Civil Rights bill. Whether the efforts he is making to that end have any meaning beyond that remains to be seen. Mr. SUMNER is not given to intrigue, usually, but he is now writing letters to prominent colored men in the Southern States, urging them to call meetings of their people and select delegations to proceed to this city for the purpose of enforcing upon their Senators and Representatives the necessity of securing the passage of the bill as an amendment to the Amnesty bill now before the Senate, the object being to compel the Democrats to take amnesty, if at all, with social equality for the negro by law. Mr. SUMNER tells his colored friends in these letters that it is time the colored man secured his rights practically as well as theoretically, that too much attention is being given to the securing of Amnesty without the guarantee of the colored man's rights.

REFORM IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The principles of the Civil Service system will be applied to the War Department to-morrow, as well as to all others. In this Department it can only apply to the clerical force, but that will at once be done. Secretary BELKNAP will name a board of examination in a day or two, and all applications for clerkships will be placed before them. Applicants will be informed that as soon as a vacancy occurs in the first class they will be notified to appear for examination.

SENATOR SCHURZ.

Mr. BUREDS, Private Secretary to Senator SCHURZ, very positively and unreservedly denies that he ever made the remark attributed to him in regard to his alleged knowledge of the movement for the restoration of the Retrenchment Committee. He says he knew nothing whatever about the resolution in advance of its presentation, and never had any talk with any one.

THE RETIRING SPANISH MINISTER.

The recall of Señor LOPEZ ROBERTS, Spanish Minister to this Government, gives rise to much comment here, mingled with a great deal of anxiety, which the reputed views of his successor are not calculated to allay. Minister ROBERTS has had a severe and difficult task here for the past three years, but has nevertheless met all the requirements of his position with great success—being required to explain, apologize for, and mitigate many of the acts of his own Government, and to secure the modifications and reparations demanded by this Government. He has at times been placed in most embarrassing position, yet his resources of diplomatic skill have always availed to adjust matters when a man of less ability or shrewdness would have blundered into an open outbreak. It is a fact thoroughly recognized here that Mr. ROBERTS' influence and action have on more than one occasion availed to prevent a recourse to hostilities on the part of this Government.

Railroad Enterprise in Central America—Discharge of Clerks—Gold Sales—Miscellaneous.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—The reporters who accompanied the Sub-Kuklux Committee to the South have not yet completed the writing out of their notes. As this work progresses the copy is printed, and when finished will make a very large volume. This will soon after the Holidays be laid on the desks of members of Congress, together with the report of the Committee, Senator SCOTT, the Chairman, now having that matter in charge.

RAILROAD PROJECT IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

Information has reached here from an official source that the Government of Costa Rica has executed a contract with HENRY MEIGGS, an American citizen, known as the great railroad contractor of South America, to construct a railroad from the port of Limon, on the Atlantic Ocean, to the City of Alajuela, about fifty miles distant from the Pacific via Cartago, San Jose and Heredia; the estimated distance being 150 miles. Mr. MEIGGS undertakes to construct the road within three years, and equip it complete for the sum of $1,600,000 sterling, $170,000 of which was paid on signing the contract; the residue is to be paid in monthly installments as the work progresses. The Government has already obtained a loan in London for $500,000 sterling. It is the purpose of the Government to put on the London market another loan at an early day for a sufficient amount to cover the entire cost of the construction of the road. Our Minister to Costa Rica says that this long talked-of and much-desired enterprise will now be carried successfully through there can be no reasonable doubt. So far as the trade of Costa Rica is concerned, the construction of this road is of interest to the people of the United States. At present almost the entire coffee crop of the country, which seldom falls below 200,000 quintals per annum, is hauled in ox carts to the port of Puntas Arenas on the Pacific, at a cost of $1 25 per quintal. Thence it is shipped in sailing vessels "around the Horn," and finds a market in London and Hamburg after a four months' voyage. Construct this road and it will not cost more than forty or fifty cents at most to take a quintal of coffee to the port of Limon, on the Atlantic, and then in nine days, by steamer, it is in New-York, at much less expense than by sailing vessels to the markets above mentioned, or to New-York by way of Aspinwall, over the Panama Railroad.

PREPARATION FOR NEW-YEAR'S DAY.

The number of persons who will receive calls to-morrow will probably be larger than any previous New-Year's Day. Appeals are made through the Press and pulpit to dispense with spirituous liquors on that occasion and to substitute harmless beverages. There is no doubt that these appeals will, in many cases, be respected. There are comparatively few members in Washington, and comprise gentlemen who have their families here, or whose homes are too distant to be visited during the Holidays.

CLERICAL REDUCTION IN THE CENSUS OFFICE.

Six weeks ago thirty-five clerks in the Census Office were discharged, and on the 1st of January the services of sixty more will be dispensed with. There will then remain about 200 or 215, besides the heads of division. Other discharges will soon take place, as the work from time to time shall be finished in sections.

MONTHLY GOLD SALES.

The Secretary of the Treasury has authorized the Assistant Treasurer in New-York to sell $1,000,000 of gold on the second and fourth Thursdays, and to purchase $1,000,000 of bonds on the first and third Thursdays during the month of January next.

GEORGIA POLITICAL AFFAIRS.

Judge LOCHRANE, late Chief-Justice of Georgia, and one of the most prominent of Southern Republicans, had a long interview with the President yesterday. He says the Administration will not interfere in the Gubernatorial affairs of Georgia, and as Gov. CONLEY personally cares nothing for the office, there will be no contest between him and Governor-elect SMITH concerning it.

A Long and Perilous Journey.

From the Detroit Tribune, Dec. 30.

A Canadian surveying party, under the charge of Civil Engineer ARCHIBALD MCNAB, of Toronto, were left at Copper Harbor, Lake Superior, at the close of navigation, and now have a long and difficult journey of 140 miles before them, to Lake Nepigon, in British America. The party left Collingwood Nov. 25, and arrived at Copper Harbor Dec. 2. The steamer Minnesota was then unable to take them across the lake, on account of the stormy weather which prevailed. They now propose to reach their destination via Green Bay, St. Paul and Duluth.

CALIFORNIA STEAMER.

Specials to the Associated Press—Snow Blockade on the Central Pacific Railroad—Murder by Mistake.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 30.—Judge LOCKE, in the Municipal Court, pleaded guilty today to an indictment for assault and battery with a pistol upon CHARLES DE YOUNG, of the Chronicle. Judge STANLEY fined him $500, saying the greater part was on account of his being a Judge upon the Bench, and it was his duty to restrain his passions, although he had received strong provocation. FRANK WHITE, a former clerk to Secretary of State NUGENT, and EDWARD HILL, both steady young men, have disappeared from Stockton under circumstances leading to the belief that both have been murdered. The robbery of the stage in Sonoma County, last week, has been traced to a Digger Indian boy, sixteen years old, who was armed with a red wood stick instead of a gun. He got no plunder, the express box being empty. He confesses having committed the robbery, and also says he was connected with the gang which made an attack on a stage near Prunia last Summer, where one of the gang named RATTLE JACK was killed, and promises to show the officers who now have him in custody where some of their plunder was buried. It is believed his evidence will convict the entire gang. Seven Eastern mails are now overdue. All mails from this point passed east of Ogden, there being no obstructions west of that point. J. W. HARKER, wife, and two children were murdered at Blue Water Station, near Tucson, Arizona, it is supposed by outlaws driven out of Sonora.

The storm in California, Oregon, and Nevada, is unabated. It is raining almost incessantly, and the rivers are everywhere overflowing. The mails, telegraph and travel are interrupted. A dispatch from San Bernardino says the Arizona Apaches have left the Verde and Camp McDowell reservations, and demand a camp at old Fort Bowie. You may look for an Indian war in Arizona. The people have been too much oppressed to bring now to any Colyer policy. Later: The storm is abating. The valley country is generally flooded. The steamer Moses Ayre, from Panama, has been telegraphed outside.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1—1 A. M.—The low barometer, which on Saturday night had advanced from Montana to Lake Huron, has moved northeastward, with rain on the lower lakes. The barometer has fallen in New-England, and heavy fog has prevailed from Cape Hatteras to Maine; foggy and clear weather in the Southern States; cloudy weather from the Gulf coast northward. An area of high barometer has advanced rapidly from Dakota south-eastward to Texas and Lake Ontario, with north-west winds and falling temperature. Clear weather is now reported west of Lake Huron and north of Arkansas. Brisk northerly winds on Lake Michigan.

PROBABILITIES.

Rising barometer and clear or clearing weather will probably extend, by Monday evening, eastward to New-York and the Middle Atlantic coast; falling temperature and north-westerly winds prevail over this region; partially cloudy and cloudy weather will prevail in the Southern and Gulf States; cloudy weather continues in New-England, clearing away Monday night; brisk north-westerly winds on Lakes Erie and Michigan Monday morning, diminishing during the day. Dangerous winds are not anticipated for the Atlantic Gulf coasts.

The Grand Wedding in 1871.

Considering what has happened since last November, the following list of presents made on the occasion of the marriage of a scion of the house of Tweed, last May, may be interesting to the public. The donors of these gifts will doubtless thank us for recalling their generosity:

Tweed's Property in Putnam County.

From the Carmel (N. Y.) Monitor, Dec. 28.

Now that "Boss" TWEED's property has become liable to attachment, would it not be well for those having the matter in charge to pay some little attention to his interests in this county? A large amount of property, having its title in TWEED, seems to be unknown to the city. The property referred to consists of Lake Gilead, Kirk Lake, and the rights to the waters of Lake Mahopac and Lake Glenida. While upon this subject, we will add, a large amount of labor has been performed in connection with the outlet of the waters, and for which no remuneration has been received for several months—the clamor for which has undoubtedly become very annoying. We can not see how the City can pay any account or the adjustment of these matters so long as the title remains in TWEED and is liable to pass at any time into the hands of other parties. The interests of the City certainly demand that this matter should be looked into.

The Loss of the Steam-Ship Florida.

From the Mobile Register, Dec. 27.

The engineer of the steam-ship Florida, Capt. PENDERSON, arrived in town Monday evening, bringing intelligence of the entire loss of that vessel. She was caught in the storm Saturday night, about seventy miles off the coast and sprung a leak, was headed for the land, which she succeeded in making about fifteen or twenty miles east of Fort Morgan, where she was run through the breakers and sunk close to the shore, going to pieces soon afterward, and making a total loss of the cargo as well as the ship. The crew escaped safe to land with the exception of one man drowned.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.

ALBANY.

Tactics of the Opposing Factions of the Democratic Candidates.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 31.—As indicated in last night's dispatch, the appearance of HENRY SMITH in the halls of the Delavan House aroused the hopes of his friends, and from that time until now he has gone on steadily gaining strength, until his adherents claim for him the certain pledges of sixty men. This claim is based on something more than talk, and if there is a mistake it will be a surprise to some of the most astute workers in the party. The friends of Gov. ALVORD have counted greatly upon the fact that Mr. SMITH has not been present at the hotel today, but for the past twelve hours a constant stream of members have found their way to the residence of Mr. SMITH, and as men who are so decided in their convictions as to call at a private house, have probably fully made up their minds on which side they propose to act, Smith men are decidedly confident. A charge has been made, and is used with great force by the Alvord men, that the State Central Committee, together with a large body of Government officials, are here working for SMITH, and for him alone. The fact is that there are in the city but few members of the State Committee, and of that number MERRITT, ROCKWELL and BROWN are pronounced Alvord men. Of the Government officials that are here, although they express themselves as favorable to Mr. SMITH, they state that they have not, nor do they intend to use, any promise or threats in order to induce members to vote for Mr. SMITH. The fact is that the feeling of a large majority of the members is that the session should open by the selection of a Speaker in whose integrity the people have confidence. Of members who are anxious that their vote shall be recorded on the side of the victor, there are of course a large number who are vacillating, and will remain so up to the opening of caucus but as so many have already made their pledges this floating material will not affect the result. It is certain that among the strong friends of ALVORD are to be found the several minor candidates, and as they will, when they find their own chances gone, throw their strength for him, it will not be surprising if the various combinations should bring his vote into very close proximity with SMITH; but that it can overcome it does not seem probable. The very fact that a doubt exists in the minds of Mr. ALVORD's friends that the administration is in favor of SMITH, is a very strong card for the latter candidate. While it is being used by them as a reason why all independent men should protest against the selection of Mr. SMITH, it is also forcible in deciding the time to hesitate before they ally themselves in opposition to the Government. As this is the really strong argument of Mr. ALVORD, it will now be seen that it is a weapon fully as dangerous to one as the other. The 6 P. M. train from New-York brought up ten or a dozen members from the lower counties, who have added materially to SMITH's chances, and, at the present writing, midnight, it is confidently asserted by members of the State Committee who have been on the ground from the opening of the contest, that HENRY SMITH will be the next Speaker of the Assembly. They are so positive in their assertions to this effect as to induce the belief that their confidence is based on the most trustworthy and reliable sources of information. Among those who came in on the train to-night were MIKE LAWRENCE and HORACE GREELEY. They are said to be agreed on a candidate for Speaker, and will act together as a unit. As far as can be ascertained Fairchild is their first choice and ALVORD the second. Mr. SMITH has maintained a dignified position with regard to the Speakership, from the first refusing to buttonhole members or to make promises in advance. He has thus won the respect of all candid members and thereby improved his prospects. ALVORD, on the other hand, has made all sorts of pledges to secure the support of this or that faction, and as some of them must necessarily be cheated, the effect has been to arouse distrust and suspicion among all of them. Outside of the Legislature it is the unanimous opinion among all men of character and integrity who are here watching the canvass for the Speakership, that the election of ALVORD, or any man like him, would have a disastrous effect upon the Republican Party, and would be fatal to the reform measures which the people are so anxiously expecting from the present Legislature. The candidates for Clerk of the House have dwindled away so that only the name of Mr. JOHNSON is prominently mentioned. UNDERWOOD and UNDERHILL are in the field, but are not very hopeful of success. For Sergeant-at-Arms in the Senate, LOGAN, of Chenango, is very strong, being pressed by Senator GRAHAM, of the Twenty-third District.

Address of the New-York State Council of Political Reform.

At the organization of the New-York State Council of Political Reform, among the measures adopted for securing its objects were the following:

"To organize and hold jurisdiction over auxiliary councils throughout the State, which shall develop their own immediate fields, in harmony with the State Council."

Except in New-York City, where there was an immediate necessity for exposing the frauds of the Ring, the organization of these subordinate councils was deferred till after the elections. To establish them just previous to an election would subject the cause to suspicion; it might be thought a political scheme. After the excitement should have subsided, men would calmly weigh the objects proposed and accord to them their just importance. Accordingly, the work of establishing Auxiliary Councils has been deferred to the present time. Now, the election is not only past, but has left open a clear path to success in organizing. The whole State is aroused to the necessity of reform. Moreover, the New-York City Councils have pushed their work with such vigor that they have checked the public plunderers and cut them off for the moment from the resources which for years past they have had in control of the State politics. Taking advantage of this opportunity, the Executive Committee of the State Council has determined to push vigorously forward the work of organization, and after mature deliberation has adopted the foregoing Constitution.

To carry out the objects for which auxiliaries are organized under this constitution, the State Council also recommends the observance of the following points:

1. The Auxiliary Council should act within existing parties, and should in no way seek to establish a new or a branch party. Therefore it is desirable that, as far as convenient, an equal number from each party be enrolled as members.

2. Care should be taken to secure members—first, of unimpeachable moral character; secondly, of high standing in the community; and, thirdly, such as will keep up an undeviating interest in the work. It is not desirable that pains be taken to make the Council large. Many good citizens who would cordially support the measures proposed would do harm by service in the Council. Of those who are worthy, some of them might be the qualified for membership by seeking office; some might lack the requisite devotion to principle which is essential; others might wish to join in order to gain political power, and such the State Council especially aims to exclude. The membership should be confined to those few men of responsibility, high character, who are willing to work purely from motives of patriotism.

3. Among the distinct duties of the Council should be the following: First, note previous to an election, and before any political excitement exists, to arrange a list of names of men who would do honor to political office, and to bring them forward as candidates. This plan has been tried with very beneficial results by the Ward Councils in New-York City. Second, to have members present at every caucus of either party, and to persuade as many good citizens as possible to attend and to work for the nomination of honest and capable men; also to persuade honest men, when nominated, not to decline. Third, to unite in exposing fraud and trickery and corruption without regard to parties or men, and to aid in prosecuting for malfeasance. Fourth, to exercise an influence over the newspapers printed in its locality to induce them to throw off party bigotry, and work for purity in politics. Fifth, to punish parties for nominating a bad man by "balting the nomination."

It is extremely desirable that the members should themselves seek no office, and receive no public emolument during membership.

4. The Auxiliary Councils should organize as soon as possible, and hold frequent sittings.

In glancing over this list of suggestions we see can fail to notice that a membership of a reform council is exacting; there is much disagreeable work, and no pay. Yet the state of public affairs demands no less of patriotic citizens. The dangers of the past foreshadow the perils of the future. The Legislature of the State has been bought and sold by one man. The representatives of the people chosen by a majority of the votes in their districts have sold out their legislation to thieves. Yet all the blame must not be heaped on the Legislature. The people themselves who have neglected their political duties share the guilt. Honest men have gone on the polls year after year without voting how the names they voted came to be upon the ballot. A railroad corporation controlled by unscrupulous men has been suffered to corrupt the sanctuary of both parties in many portions of the interior. The Whisky Ring has been allowed to control many hundred votes in each county, and to rule in the caucus whenever its choice. Meanwhile, a partisan. Press, both to expose the sins of its own party, fails of the good influence it ought to exert.

Our free institutions are in great, very great, danger. The work of reform in New-York City has only for a moment checked the bold assaults of the spoilers. The same class of men from whom the head conspirators sprang still exists, and is always ready to seize the reins of government when honest people relax their grasp. A few good men in each community, sacrificing sometimes their personal comfort, and occasionally laying aside their private business to unite their exertions, can hold their fellow-citizens to the virtuous exercise of public duty. The experience of the late election in New-York City teaches how much can be done by a handful of men through organization, and the vast amount of honest effort lost in other parts of the State where individuals did not unite their strength, shows how little can be done without it. Once organized there is much to hope for and to do. Every town in New-York State, if well done, will have good results flowing out to all parts of the Union. The purifying hand will be felt not only for the next few years, but as long as the Republic shall last. It is by no means unlikely that the very existence of the Republic depends upon the success of this movement.

THE PRESIDENCY.

Miscellaneous of the Democratic Party—Anything to "Beat Grant."

The Cincinnati Enquirer, one of the leading organs of the Democratic Party, publishes in its issue of Saturday last the following brief article, which shows not only to what desperate straits the party is now reduced, but that its leaders are beginning to realize and admit the fact:

There is a very excellent feeling pervading the masses of the Democratic Party on the subject of the nomination of a next President. There is no effort among the friends of any of the gentlemen who have been mentioned in connection with the nomination to attempt to pack the Convention in the interests of any of the candidates. The general idea is to make all reasonable concessions, to waive prejudice and personal friendships, if by so doing the local conflict with the success which is so generally desired. It is felt that GRANT must be beaten at all costs or hazards. Never before was there a Convention where the delegates were so little influenced by previous commitals as they will be in the coming Democratic Convention. They need to make a comparison of views, and to unite upon that man who, qualified for the station, can obtain the most votes. Those who deem it expedient to nominate any of our well-known Democratic Statesmen who have more or less been active in the political contests of the past, do so, for the most judge, very few. It is the almost universal impression that some combination should be formed with those Republicans who are hostile to GRANT. The only difficulty is as to the manner in which it can be effected. We think the best plan would be for the leading Liberal Republicans to meet in Convention at the same time and place that the Democratic Convention will be held, and then communicate with the latter party through a committee of conference. It was in this way that the reform ticket was nominated in Hamilton County in 1869 and triumphantly elected, although GRANT had a 1,600 majority only a few hours before. It is worthy of thought also whether it would not be expedient to follow the example set us by the Whig opposition to MARTIN VAN BUREN in 1840, who held their National Convention with closed doors, in secret session. There can be much more freedom of consultation where it is done without the view and hearing only of those who are engaged in it and responsible for its results. Speeches are then made, not to the galleries or outside public, but to the delegates. A nomination that would have the assent of both wings of the opposition, which was not cumbered with a questionable platform, would be sure to succeed. It will probably be deemed best to have no platform at all, except that which calls for a change in the Federal Constitution. The first thing that is in order is to turn out the present corrupt and disreputable régime. That accomplished, its friends in Congress and among the people would be able, beyond a doubt, to agree upon a platform and a ticket acceptable to both wings of the Opposition.

The New French Academician.

M. LITTRÉ, the new member of the French Academy, has earned a brilliant reputation as a writer and philologist. He was born in Paris on Feb. 1, 1801. In early life he studied with a view to becoming a physician, but before obtaining his diploma he decided upon devoting his time to philology and the history of medicine. M. LITTRÉ's first important effort was a translation of the works of HIPPOCRATES, in ten volumes. The first volume was printed in 1839 and the last in 1861. Soon after its publication, the translator joined the staff of the National newspaper, and remained one of the principal editors of that journal until 1851. When AUGUSTE COMTE made known under the name of "A Positive Philosophy," a new philosophic and social doctrine, M. LITTRÉ was one of COMTE's most enthusiastic admirers and defenders. He afterward contributed to Positivist literature sundry pamphlets and articles analyzing, elucidating and suggesting the application of COMTE's ideas, and founded the "The Positivist Review." M. LITTRÉ also translated Dr. STRAUSS' Life of Jesus. But his most notable production has been a dictionary of the French language, which is likely to be held, when completed, the standard dictionary of the nation. He did not play a great part in politics, and retired from active political life in 1848. In 1849 Mr. LITTRÉ was proposed for membership in the Academy, on motion of the dictionary mentioned above. But M. DUPATLOUP had just denounced publicly his doctrines as immoral and impious, and he was defeated. His election explains the Bishop of Orleans' motion, referred to in the cable dispatch printed elsewhere.

Telegraphic Brevities.

JOSEPH PARKER, of Baltimore, a veteran actor and scenic artist, died Saturday night.

Hon. SPENCER KELLOGG, of Union, N. Y., an old and prominent citizen, died there yesterday.

Secretary FISH returned to Washington yesterday, and will receive his friends at the residence of Secretary ROBESON today.

ABRAM HEATON, of New-Haven, a wealthy and prominent man, died Saturday, aged ninety-five. He was born ten days after the Declaration of Independence.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

The Gas Frauds.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You have alluded frequently of late to the enormous sums expended this year upon Madison-square, but you do not state that although such large amounts have been devoted to its improvements, they are yet far from being completed. Madison-avenue, between Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth streets, is so torn up and obstructed by piles of stone that one cannot drive through it with any degree of comfort. As the pavement was torn up, and material for repaving unloaded there two months ago, I suppose that some vague intentions of getting the street in possible order before the Winter set in existed in the mind of some one. As it is now, however, the work will have to remain undone until Spring. Before the election the Park and its vicinity swarmed with workmen, and during the months before this event, I believe I acquired a thorough appreciation of the beauties and delights of honest labor as represented by huddle posts. These peaceful sons of toil could always be seen at their posts at eight in the morning exchanging friendly salutations, and soon tranquilly and thoughtfully delving the soil, tenderly transplanting the green sod, propelling the wheelbarrow as solicitously as if the burden were a new born babe, and ever and anon assuming their cautious by friendly exhortations, by a pull at their pipes, and a seat on a convenient paving stone. When the hour of noon struck, the frugal meal, the morning paper, (generally the Sun.) the fragrant nicotine, and an hour of pleasant conversation, again cheered them for the few hours of afternoon work. At 5 o'clock they betook themselves eagerly to their homes, there to prattle with their young families, to instruct them in the ways of virtue, and then to improve their own minds by the perusal of instructive works. At least I suppose it is to enable them to do this that they limit their work to eight hours. But after the election, the crowd of "laborers" disappeared, and their number was reduced to a few stragglers outside and inside the park. It may be of interest to state that workmen have been recently engaged in breaking up large portions of the new concrete pavement in the southern part of the Park, for what reason I cannot surmise, unless it be that it was laid in such cold weather as to cause it to freeze before it "set." A mistake was made, too, in not having the pavement of a dark color instead of being as light. It will be found that in hot sunny weather it will be hot, glaring and blistering. M.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Dec. 29, 1871.

Henry Hilton on Gravel.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Please say to the member of the present Park Commission who wrote the "Gravel" article in the Times of this morning that I never, personally, purchased a yard of gravel during my connection with the Department; that I never fixed, or agreed upon the price for any purchased; that all gravel used was bought upon the requisitions of the Chief Engineer or the Superintendent of the Central Park, and purchased in the usual manner by either Mr. VAN NORT, the Comptroller, or Mr. BARRETT, his purchasing clerk, and the price agreed upon at the time, and I have not the slightest doubt that they purchased it at the lowest rate possible. Indeed, the Commissioner who wrote your article would not dare impugn the integrity of either of those gentlemen, however much his personal malice toward me might lead him to use your columns to abuse the late Park Commissioners.

He also knows that during my connection with the Department I was never interested, either directly or indirectly, in any contract or purchase made in its behalf; that every dollar expended was honestly paid out upon the work under our charge, and that the City has in all cases received full value for the expenditure.

With all the records and vouchers of the Department in his hands, I challenge him or you to prove the contrary. HENRY HILTON.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Dec. 30, 1871.

[There are two points in this letter which call for notice. In the first place, the article which we published on Saturday was not written or suggested by any member of the Park Commission, nor was our information obtained from that source. Guesses at the authors of newspaper articles almost invariably turn out to be wrong, and Mr. HILTON is not more expert at the work than other people. In the next place, Mr. HILTON uses a subterfuge when he says that he never "personally purchased a yard of gravel," and that "he never fixed or agreed upon the price of any purchased." We have made inquiries of Mr. BARRETT, the purchasing clerk, and he states that the Commissioners absolutely fixed the price which he was to pay for the gravel—that price being advanced to $3 80 per yard under Messrs. SWEENY, HILTON, and TOM FIELDS, and instantly lowered to $3 50 per yard under the revived Board. Mr. HILTON was as much responsible as any of his fellow-Commissioners for this imposition upon the public. Mr. HILTON's last statement that the $6,250,000 which he and his companions made away with in eighteen months, was "honestly paid out upon the works,"—when the old Commissioners only spent $5,200,000 in thirteen years, creating the Central Park during that period—will require something much better than his bare word to substantiate.—ED. TIMES.]

Removal of Bad Judges.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Section 11 of article 6, known as the judiciary article of the Constitution of this State, recently adopted, is as follows:

"Judges of the Court of Appeals and Justices of the Supreme Court may be removed by concurrent resolution of both Houses of the Legislature if two-thirds of all the members elected to each House concur thereon. All judicial officers, except those mentioned in this section, and except Justices of the Peace and Judges and Justices of inferior Courts not of record, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor, if two-thirds of all the members elected to the Senate concur therein. But no removal shall be made by virtue of this section unless the cause thereof be entered on the journals, nor unless the party complained of shall have been served with a copy of the charges against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard. On the question of removal the ayes and nays shall be entered on the journal."

This section, with little change, is the same as section 11 of article 4, of the Constitution adopted in 1846. The power conferred upon the Legislature by that provision has never been exercised. No rules have ever been adopted for proceeding under it.

It will readily be seen, however, that, with reference to Justices of the Supreme Court, the hearing may be summary and the removal instant.

The Judges of the Superior Court are somewhat safer in their places, as it requires the "recommendation of the Governor" and two-thirds of the Senate to remove one of them.

If the profession do their duty in preparing the evidence and presenting the charges, it is believed that the Legislature will be vigilant in exercising the power, and in every case where the evidence fairly establishes a good and sufficient cause, will remove at once.

Nor ought we to doubt that the Governor will now do his duty in all cases requiring action from the inferior Courts. Let us hope for a great change and an honest judiciary very soon. LEX.

"Serious Blunder"—Mr. Monk Smith and Others.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

When we receive circulars from the different savings banks inviting us to prepare for old age or sickness, are we to place confidence in them? How can poor, hard-working people to discriminate between honest and dishonest, good and bad banks? In my opinion, it is the duty of the Government to protect our hard earnings, and until it can ensure protection adopted, I shall not be so ready to "save" in any bank. Yours, respectfully,

SATURDAY, Dec. 30, 1871. A CLERK.

A Batch of Suggestions.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Why not compel the Harlem Railroad to sink their track from Forty-second-street or Thirteenth-street, to Harlem River, and then arch it over, the top of such arch to be level with the streets—then on top of the arch trains should run to Harlem, starting every five minutes, and stopping at every fifth or tenth street.

The Harlem Road proposed its charter for the purpose of carrying passengers to the upper part of the Island. For many years it has failed to do so. It is a positive injury to New-York City. Its business is to take persons in town, and to carry them out beyond our taxes. It is easier now to go to Morrisania than to One Hundredth-street or Eighty-fifth-street.

Harlem Railroad should at once be compelled to run cars to Hudson River every fifteen minutes, stopping every ten streets to receive or leave passengers. The Harlem stock is quoted above 90—a rich corporation. The Hudson River cars should be compelled to go down their old way near Hudson River, and have sates and a watchman, night and day, at all street where there can be any passing. The New-Haven Railroad should carry its passengers and freight down-town near the East River, and the Harlem should take their freight trains either on the east or west side, not down Fourth-avenue and obstruct travel as they have done for many years past. Steam Fleet Service.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In a brief editorial in your issue of this morning, in relation to the Williams & Guion line of mail steamers, you say: "We believe it is the experience of most merchants and newspapers that the arrangement has not worked well," and that the mails "are on an average two days longer on the road than they used to be," and that "the service is very irregular."

In reply, we beg to state:

1. That we deny that such has been the experience of most of our merchants and newspaper men. On the contrary, we assert that the arrangement has not only worked well, but we are pleased to state that we have the positive information of a large portion of the classes referred to, as well as that of the Post-office Department.

2. That the trips are two days longer than they used to be in another great mistake. Our trips average about ten days, and we are building two new steamers, which are contracted to be ready in April next, when the average time, we verily believe, will be equal to the best mail service from this port.

3. The allegation that the service is irregular is entirely erroneous. This is proved by the unsolicited letters from Postmaster Jones, to which we refer.

In conclusion, we think it are improper to state the fact that two years ago the other steam-ship lines combined and absolutely refused to carry the mails upon the terms fixed by law. In the interests of the City of New-York, and thus we believed the Government of its embarrassment. But now these same lines are insisting upon performing the service upon the terms they then indignantly refused! Should that be given to them now which they then so abs

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

During the past week, ending with Saturday, Dec. 30, the market has been exceedingly dull, but few private transactions having been effected, and public auctions at the Exchange held on only one day, (Thursday,) when, at two legal sales, City real estate to the value of $12,200 was disposed of. These figures therefore represent the business of the week, as against the sum of $2,850 for the week previous, ending with Saturday, Dec. 23.

REVIEW OF THE MARKET FOR 1871.

With the past week the season of 1871 closes, and the business of the year is finished. A recapitulation, therefore, of the principal events and sales of the year is not out of place. In this connection, in answer to the first question which arises, "What has been the state of business during the year?" it may be said that, although marked by little speculative excitement, the market has been generally a firm one, property owned by speculators and others strongly held, and when eligibly located, disposed of at good figures, and at an advance over the rates of previous years. This has been particularly noticeable with unimproved realty, for if there has been any depreciation in values within the year, it has been, strange to say, in improved property.

New-York Real Estate.

As is always the case the first four months of the year, shows the greatest activity, so far as public auctions are concerned, and within this period a number of important transactions were successfully consummated, of which the following are more particularly worthy of mention:

Jan. 18, sale of the Cram estate, by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., embracing principally improved real estate located on Broadway, Canal, Laurens and other leading thoroughfares. Total amount realized at auction, $1,161,500. It was at this sale that the property on the corner of Broadway and Twenty-first-street was purchased in the Tweed interest for $600,000.

In February public auctions of note occurred as follows, conducted respectively by the auctioneers named: Feb. 2, Cipriani estate, improved property, on Broadway and Liberty streets, sold by E. H. LUDLOW & Co. for $130,300. Feb. 21, improved and unimproved property belonging to the Kerr estate, sold by JAMES M. MILLER for $210,625, and on the same day property belonging to the Vanderpoel estate, sold by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. to the value of $72,000. Feb. 28, property belonging to the estate of THOMAS J. BRANCH, sold by JAMES M. MILLER for $176,000, and also on the same date east-side up-town lots, owned by the estate of ANDREW MCGOWN, deceased, disposed of by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. for $134,450.

Under date of March 16, we note the sale, by order of trustees, of property belonging to the estate of D. S. FRARING, located on Fifth-avenue and elsewhere, conducted by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., at which the sum of $499,050 was realized. On March 23 the first sale of west-side and Central Park lots, 105 in number, forming a portion of the estate of GOVERNEUR M. WILKINS, took place, also conducted by Messrs. MULLER & Co., at which all the property offered was sold for $766,750. This sale was continued April 4 and 5, and in all 256 lots were disposed of for $1,122,340, thus making the transaction the largest and most important of the year. On March 27 the same firm sold a number of lots located on the Grand Boulevard, Tenth-avenue, Seventy-ninth, Eighty-fourth and Eighty-first streets, belonging to the estate of ALEX. LIBBEY, deceased, for $209,250 in the aggregate.

In April, in addition to the continuation sale of the Wilkins property, noted above, other interesting auctions were held as follows: April 13, by A. J. BLEECKER, SON & CO., sale of the Purdy estate, improved property, located in Brooklyn, Eighth, Twenty-second, Twenty-third, and other streets, sold for $116,415; April 20, sixty-seven east-side lots, belonging to the Jones estate, sold by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. for $118,000; and April 25, at a public auction, by order of Alvan Higgins, a number of very desirable Morningside Park lots, and other building lots, sold by the same firm for $264,250.

In the month of May the following important transactions in City real estate were effected: May 3, sale of a plot containing thirteen City lots on the Grand Circle at the junction of Broadway and Fifty-ninth-street, belonging to the Connolly estate, sold by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. for $419,000; May 25, sale of the French Theatre property on Fourteenth-street, by E. H. LUDLOW & Co., for $115,500; and May 24, sale of the Florence Hotel property at McComb's Dam, embracing some 150 City lots, belonging in part to the Rutherford estate, sold by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. for $105,000.

On the 7th and 8th days of June an extensive sale of lots belonging to the Dyckman estate took place at the Exchange, conducted by V. K. STEVENSON & Son, E. P. FAIRCHILD, auctioneer, at which 448 lots and plots of land were sold for $802,000, in total. Other sales of note have also occurred during the year as follows: June 24, sale of improved property belonging to the Spofford estate, (principal piece the St. James Hotel,) sold by E. H. LUDLOW & Co., for $760,000; Oct. 10, sale of 60 lots belonging to the Livingston estate, by J. M. MILLER, for $70,000; Oct. 26, sale of 32 plots of land, located at Harlington Heights, and 23 lots adjacent on Broadway, belonging to the estate of LUCIUS CHITTENDEN, deceased, sold by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., for $430,000; and November 16, as a public auction at the Exchange, conducted by JOSEPH MCGUIRE, 18 up-town building lots sold for $145,375.

In reference to the sales of more or less importance space forbids us to particularize, but the following figures represent the value of City real estate sold at auction at the Exchange for each month of the year: January, $1,830,600; February, $1,606,136; March, $2,084,255; April, $2,821,557; May, $1,866,905; June, $1,117,050; July, $625,075; August, $291,440; September, $285,700; October, $1,708,260; November, $696,325; December, $619,800; total, $17,571,699—a large showing for a year's work.

Brooklyn Real Estate.

In regard to Brooklyn property but little can be said, for during the entire year the market in that city has been characterized only by a general inactivity, the public sales being few in number, and in nearly every instance brought about by forced circumstances. At the principal sales held in Brooklyn within the year the following results have been scenured: Jan. 18, sale held by J. COLE at Commercial Exchange, property sold to the value of $75,000; June 7, by same auctioneer, property to value of $25,000 sold; June 15, by same auctioneer, Williamsburg lots to the value of $12,000; and on same date by COLE & MURPHY, 86 the City Brooklyn, 300 Prospect Park lots sold for $101,000; June 21, by J. COLE, property to the value of $40,000, and July 12, by same auctioneer, fifty-three lots belonging to the estate of ELIAS HOWE, Jr., sold for $60,000. During the latter portion of the year but little if anything has been accomplished. An improvement is predicted for the coming season, and considerable confidence is felt that the efforts now being made for municipal reform in our sister city may have a beneficial influence upon the real estate market.

Suburban Sales of the Year.

In the matter of suburban sales held last Summer and in the early Fall, the business was never better, as nearly all the auctions promoted were well attended and successfully carried through. To speak particularly of any special transaction is impossible, owing to the want of space, but from the list of sales here given complete with the amount realized in each instance noted, investors and others can readily draw their conclusions. March 25, sale of lots on Courtlandt-avenue, Fordham, Westchester County, by S. DINGEE, amount realized, $50,000; April 11, sale of lots at Hudson City, N. J., by A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & Bro., amount realized, $20,800; April 12, sale of two separate lots of land at West Chester, by S. DINGEE, amount realized, $15,000; May 1, sale at the Exchange of 102 lots, forming the St. George Cricket Ground, located at Jersey City, N. J., sold by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., for $39,225; May 8, sale of 20 plots at Rutherford Park, N. J., by JOHNSON & MILLER, for $6,500; May 11, sale of property known as "The Hawthornes," at Rye Beach, Westchester County, by S. DINGEE, for $61,000; May 16, sale of 297 City lots at Rutherford Park, N. J., by A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & Bro., for $70,000; May 18, sale of the Bradford estate, embracing ninety-one acres, located at Rye, Westchester County, by S. DINGEE, for $90,000; May 25, sale at Edgewater, Staten Island, by JOHNSON & MILLER of 149 City lots, for $20,000; same date, sale at Mamaroneck, Westchester County, of portion of Grand Park property, by S. DINGEE, for $40,000; same date, sale at Flushing, Long Island, by E. A. LAWRENCE, of portion of Bowne estate, for $24,000; May 30, sale at Rutherford Park, N. J., by A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & Bro., of 286 City lots, for $60,000; May 31, sale at Richmond Park, Staten Island, by JOHNSON & MILLER, of 80 City lots for $62,150; June 1, sale at Whitestone, Long Island, by A. J. MILLER, 150 City lots belonging to the Raymond Poole estate, located on Tremont, Westchester County, sold for $101,000.

General Matters.

In regard to business for the coming season a good degree of activity is anticipated, and in our own opinion we may look for a good business year. The recent political changes in municipal affairs cannot fail to produce a good effect, for it is a moral certainty that the City Government will be economically carried on and thereby taxes not so much reduced as properly applied, real estate will be the interest mainly benefited. It also some ahead for rapid transit from one extreme to the other of the City is adopted, and the plan carried into effect, or an application shown that it will be, higher figures will be obtained for uptown lots than are now estimated, while downtown property will, in addition, appreciate in value. For the past year, taken as a whole, although for a short term of it the market has been dull and sluggish, it has not been a bad one for real estate, and, from present indications, the coming year certainly does not give promise of any worse results, while, should any change take place, one for the better, if anything, is looked for.

BUSINESS FOR THE PRESENT WEEK.

During the present week the following sales are thus far announced:

To-morrow, (Tuesday,) Jan. 2, 1872, JOSEPH MCGUIRE, under a partition court order, at the Exchange, JULIUS J. LYON, Esq., referee, will offer at auction 86 the Kinkaids a house and lot located on the north side of Third-street, 20 feet 7 inches east of Avenue C, lot 18 by 48.

On Friday, Jan. 6, property as follows will be offered at the Exchange by JOHN HERMAN, under a partition sale, premises known as No. 314 East Thirty-eighth-street, embracing a lot 21 by 46, with a four-story brick tenement-house on the front thereof, and a four-story frame tenement in the rear; also, a two-story brick private stable, located on the south side of East Thirty-fifth-street, between Lexington and Third avenues, and known as Nos. 219 and 221. E. H. LUDLOW & Co., at a foreclosure sale, F. F. ROBINSON, Esq., referee, the house and lot Nos. 61 and 63 West Sixteenth-street. By JOS. MCGUIRE, at a foreclosure sale, J. J. LYON, referee, a house and lot—the latter 15 by 100.4—on the south side of Forty-sixth-street, 250 feet east of Seventh-avenue; also, at another similar sale, M. S. BEACH, Esq., referee, two building lots, together in size 51.1 by 102.2, situate on the south side of Eighty-fifth-street, 325.6 east of Fourth-avenue. By E. H. MULLER, also at a foreclosure sale, adjourned from last week, under the direction of D. P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee, a lot on the east side of Broadway, 125.1 north of Seventy-ninth-street.

The sales of Jan. 6, contrary to the usual custom, are advertised in this issue; JAMES M. MILLER, auctioneer in each instance, at which property as follows will be offered in foreclosure by order of the Supreme Court, R. C. BRAMAN, Esq., referee, a lot 50 by 100.5, with improvements on the south side of Seventieth-street, 100 feet east of Lexington-avenue, and by order of the Supreme Court, JULIUS J. LYON, Esq., referee, SOLOMON L. BOARDMAN, Esq., referee, four lots, together in size 100 by 100.4, with brick buildings thereon, located on the south side of Forty-sixth-street, 250 feet west of Sixth-avenue. The last named sale is once adjourned from last week.

A great number of the auctions projected are book auctions, and of importance. To them reference will be made in due season.

Bonds Limited to $16,000 Per Mile on Finished Road.

The Road is being built through the centre of the State, from the Red River to the Rio Grande, bringing the interior of the State, with its population and extensive productions, into direct communication with the railroad system of the United States, via the Cairo and Fulton Railroad.

Sixty miles of the Road, between Hearne on the line of the Houston and Texas Central Railroad and Fulton, on the Red River, have been completed, and are now in operation, and the balance of the work is progressing rapidly.

THE STOCKHOLDERS HAVE PAID IN $3,000,000 IN CASH, WHICH HAS ALL BEEN JUDICIOUSLY EXPENDED IN CONSTRUCTION PRIOR TO OFFERING THE BONDS FOR SALE. The names of the stockholders, which include some of our best citizens, can be seen at the office of the Company.

EIGHT PER CT. BONDS, OF GREENE COUNTY, State of Missouri

The attention of investors is called to the above Bonds, which are issued to the Kansas City and Memphis branch of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company. The total debt of Greene County, prior to the issue of these bonds, was about $48,000. The assessed valuation of taxable property—which is estimated at half its actual value—is $8,712,000, in addition to which some $2,000,000 of railroad property will become taxable for the first time during the present year.

The entire issue of these bonds is $600,000, in coupon bonds of $1,000 each, bearing date Aug. 1, 1871, and maturing in twenty years. Interest, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, is payable in New-York on the first days of February and August in each year. We are authorized to offer this loan to the public at 90 and accrued interest, with the reserved right to advance the price at any time. At this price they pay OVER ELEVEN PER CENT. on the investment.

Government and other marketable securities received in exchange at current rates, we paying express charges both ways.

Pamphlets, &c., with full particulars, or any further information, will be furnished upon application, either personally or by letter.

WINSLOW, LANIER & CO., BANKERS, No. 9 PINE-ST., NEW-YORK, OFFER FOR SALE:

any part of $1,000,000 GRAND RAPIDS AND INDIANA RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS, bearing seven per cent. interest, payable in GOLD. Issue of Government Land Grant, the balance remaining unsold of the $5,000,000 First Mortgage Bonds, which are also secured by a LAND GRANT of over 1,000,000 acres. The road is built, the proceeds of the sales of which are applied to the completion of the bonds. Hon. W. A. Howard, Land Commissioner, reports, Dec. 12, that the land sales to that date amount to $1,000,000, or at an average of $3 per acre. He estimates the product of the Land Grant at not less $10,000,000, clear of expenses. Two hundred and twenty (220) miles of the Railroad are now in operation, and the proceeds of the money to pay the interest on the whole issue of bonds, principal and accrued interest. We recommend these bonds to investors as a perfectly safe and desirable security.

REDEMPTION OF BONDS OF THE NEW-YORK AND TEXAS COMMON RAILWAY COMPANY.—EXTENSION OF TIME.—Sealed proposals for the sale of bonds to the two sinking funds will be received until March 1, 1872. The amount to the sinking fund provided for the redemption of the bonds, secured by mortgage on the Western Division to Silver-tree Creek ($12,000) dollars. The amount in the sinking fund provided for the redemption of the bonds, secured by mortgage on the Western Division to Silver-tree Creek ($12,000) dollars. Proposals should be addressed to the undersigned, and plainly indicate whether the bonds offered are of the main line or of the Western Division. The bonds offered at lowest price will be purchased, and successful bidders notified without delay.

BOARDING AND LODGING.

THE WICKENBURG MASSACRE.

First Authentic Account from an Eye-Witness.

Letter from a Wounded Survivor—How Young Loring was Killed—The Attacking Party—A United States Officer's Inhumanity.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON, Saturday, Dec. 29, 1871.

The relatives of the lamented FRED. W. LORING, the brilliant and promising young journalist, of whose murder, with five others, in the Indian country, last November, many contributing reports have been printed, have received a copy of a letter written by one of the two survivors of the party, giving the first connected account of the affair. According to this, the attacking party were certainly Indians, citizens having traced them to their reservation, and the butchery was sudden and frightful; and what is of graver importance at this time, a United States officer having control of the Indians charged with the crime is made guilty of preventing all investigations, and of surprising inhumanity. I have obtained a copy of this letter for prompt publication:

EHRENBURG, Arizona Territory, Dec. 5, 1871.

William G. Fordham, Esq., Trinity Building, New-York:

DEAR SIR: In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of Nov. 16, 1871, I am pleased to be able to give you an account of the death of my friend LORING, who was well-known to me and whose untimely death is deeply regretted by me. We left Fort Whipple, near Prescott, Arizona Territory, on Saturday, Nov. 4, in the best of health and spirits. To be sure, the stage was rather crowded, but being all of such good tempers we had a very nice time, LORING being the most lively of us all, anticipating a speedy return to his friends East. Well, he retained his inside seat until we reached Wickenburg, on Sunday morning, Nov. 6, 1871, when, after leaving there, he preferred to have an outside seat, to which I most decidedly objected; but he insisted on being outside for a short time. I had two revolvers and he had none; in fact, no arms whatever. He rejected my offer of a revolver, saying at the same time, "My dear KRUGER, we are now comparatively safe. I have traveled with Lieut. WHEELER for nearly eight months, and have never been an Indian." Well, we rolled on until about 11 A. M., when the fatal attack was made. The first warning I had was the warning cry of the driver, who cried "Apaches! Apaches!" At the same moment the Indians, who had concealed, fired the first volley, killing poor LORING, the driver, and the other outside passenger, Mr. ADAMS. They killed also the off lead horse and wounded the other lead horse. The horses, very much frightened, then ran forward about twenty yards, when they made a sudden stop. At the same time LORING fell off the stage and so the other passenger. At the same moment the Indians fired the second volley from three sides—the both sides and rear—not more than four or five yards from the stage, killing Mr. SHOSTAL and severely wounding the inside passengers, and wounding Miss SHEPHARD, myself and Mr. SALMON, of Lieut. WHEELER's party. The latter gent was mortally wounded and fell out of the stage, and crawled away, but was finally captured by the Indians, scalped and otherwise mutilated. The only one not then wounded was Mr. HAYNEY, of Lieut. WHEELER's party. Both parties navigated commenced immediately firing. Each one fired six shots. Not having any more ammunition I ceased firing. The Indians then disappeared beyond the bushes.

But what a terrible spectacle it was to see the six dead bodies in plain sight! LORING was lying right under my very eyes, not yet dead, but suffering, apparently, terribly. He was shot through his left temple, his right eye, and his lungs. He suffered for about four minutes, but I am positive that he died before I made my escape. Knowing that it would be useless to attempt to escape with him, and that they would come back to plunder the stage, I remained perfectly quiet, having in the meantime ascertained that Miss SHEPHARD was yet alive, but badly wounded. She succeeded in getting a loaded revolver from one of the killed passengers, which she gave to me. I then told her to keep cool and be ready to run as soon as I would give the signal. Well, in about six minutes of terrible suspence I saw the Indians slowly creeping toward the stage. I counted and saw plainly fifteen Indians all dressed in blue soldiers' trowsers. When they came within five yards of the stage I jumped up, yelled and fired at them. The wounds, at the same time, yelled also, and we succeeded admirably in driving them off for the time being, and got time to leave the stage. Before I left the stage I cried out as loud as I possibly could if any one was left alive, but only Mr. ADAMS answered me; but, he was mortally wounded and could not even move his hands or feet, so I had to leave him to his fate. He was afterward found with his throat cut, and otherwise mutilated. The Indians afterward followed me for about five miles, and I had a running fight with them, until I fell in with the "buck-board." I had to leave the wounded woman for over two miles in my left arm. I myself received one shot through the right armpit, coming out on the shoulder, and two shots in my back. The woman also had three shots, one dangerous.

How I could escape with my life, and be able to save the life of Miss SHEPHARD, is more than I can account for. That I left my mark with the Indians, there is no doubt, because two Indians died from gun-shot wounds at Camp Date Creek Reservation; but the commanding officer refused to have the thing investigated, for fear of evidence being brought out that they were his pets—that is, Camp Date Creek Indians. At all events, there is no doubt whatever that the outrage was committed by Indians, and that by Camp Date Creek Indians, those so called friendly Indians whom Uncle Sam feeds.

After the news reached Wickenburg, we were brought to Wickenburg after sixteen hours of terrible suffering and agony. I stopped at the place of attack and closed the eyes of all my poor traveling companions. LORING, poor boy, was not mutilated, but looked calm and peaceful, excepting his fearful wounds through the head. He wore "soldiers' clothing." His hat is in my possession now; if your wish it you can have it. LORING and four of his companions in fate were decently buried the next day, Monday, Nov. 6, 1871, in one coffin. I saw them buried. The other man who got scalped died on the road. Mr. SEXTON, of the Vulture Mill, at Wickenburg, attended to the funeral. Rest assured that our friend LORING had a decent funeral. Peace be with his ashes. I forwarded everything belonging to LORING to Lieut. WHEELER, keeping his hat, which you can have should you desire it. There are four bullet holes through the same. What LORING lost I don't profess to know. I know I lost everything but my life. The Indians got, to my certain knowledge, about twenty-five thousand dollars worth of property belonging to me and Miss SHEPHARD.

There is not a particle of doubt in my mind that the attacking party were Indians. I have known Indians since the last 8 or 9 years, and cannot be mistaken; besides, all indications show that they were Indians. Every citizen here will swear to it, because those citizens tracked the Indians from the place of outrage to Camp Date Creek. But the commanding officer, Capt. O'BRIEN, Twenty-first Infantry, not only allowed the Indians to go unpunished, but also refused me, Miss SHEPHARD, the two surviving cripples, shelter. Yes, Sir; he ordered us off his reservation, and I wish to heaven you would publish this act of inhumanity in your New-York papers. Please show this letter to Mr. LORING, Boston, Mass., who wrote to me the same same you did.

I am, Sir, very truly yours,

WILLIAM KRUGER.

Chief Clerk to Capt. C. W. FOSTER, A. S. M., United States Army, Ehrenburg, Arizona Territory.

The Hunter's Point Bible War.

On Saturday the trustees of the First Ward School at Hunter's Point, again threatened hostilities. They have positively refused to open the school building unless the reading of the Bible is discontinued, and served a notice to that effect on the Commissioners. They state also that the Commissioners have exceeded their authority, as will be seen by the following document served on the latter:

LONG ISLAND CITY, Dec. 28, 1871.

To the Board of Education:

GENTLEMEN: We will please take notice that the Board of School Trustees of the First Ward of this city deem it illegal for the Board of Education to furnish supplies for this school, and that they will hold you responsible for all school funds paid out for such purpose in such case as already stated in the charter of the city, section 8, article 9, page 57.

By order of the Board of School Trustees, First Ward, N. Y. JOSEPH E. MCCARTY, Secretary.

The notice was read by the Secretary of the Board, Mr. PALMER, and voted to be returned to the trustees.

Fatal Railroad Accident.

CALEB FELLOWS, thirty-five years of age, residing in Alnsie-street, near Graham-avenue, Williamsburg, was killed between New-Haven and Litchfield, on the New-York and New-Haven Railroad, on Saturday afternoon. Deceased had been at work in Litchfield the past week, and was returning to New-Haven to take the New-York express-train. On turning a curve, and walking on the track, he was struck by upon the other track, and another train, turning the curve behind him, struck and killed him instantly. Two companions, who had started with him from Litchfield, had his remains put in a coffin and conveyed by his late residence.

Deceased was a Paid Worthy Patriarch of the Sons of Temperance, a worthy man, and leaves a wife and one child.

THE FOG.

Singular Weather of the Last Few Days—Confusion of Ferry-Boat Passengers.

New-York is being perplexed with every possible variety of unpleasant weather. The mercury in the thermometer has sunk to the neighborhood of zero, and has mounted to fifty-seven degrees above it. Some days it has snowed, some days it has sleeted, some days a violent wind has driven the snow into the face of pedestrians, some days the mud and slush has been ankle deep. Yesterday, by way of climax to the horrible stretch, was added a drizzling mist that never ceased, and a fog of the most unpleasant density. During the morning this lifted somewhat in the City; and permitted worshippers to see their road toward their respective churches, but in the Bay it settled sullenly down on the water, and remained there. The North Shore Staten Island ferry-boat, which started from Fort Richmond as usual, reached New-Brighton with extreme difficulty, and had to halt there, it being considered dangerous to proceed. The folks in New-York, who had assembled at the foot of Dey-street awaiting the arrival, were greatly disturbed at its non-appearance. The ladies thought it had gone down, but the gentlemen blamed the Ferry Company, and declared that it was always imposing on the public. As the hours slipped by and still the ferry-boat did not loom, through the fog, their ire increased. A man, got upon the woodwork off the ferry-house and addressed the crowd. He stigmatized the action of the Company and proposed an indignation meeting. It was agreed to, a Chairman and Secretary were appointed, and a motion was put that the hour for the arrival of the ferry-boat had come and gone, that several hours for several ferry-boats had disappeared, and yet none had come to hand, that this was a betrayal of the confidence of the public, and that the Company ought to be informed of what the public is represented by the meeting, thought of them. The ladies were allowed to vote, and the motion was carried unanimously. A committee of three gentlemen was appointed by the Chair to communicate the result to the Company, and the meeting adjourned, some going home in disgust, others proceeding to the Island by the other ferry.

A TIMES reporter, who visited the office of the sinning Company, was very affably received by one of the officials present. He said that the Company was always eager to oblige the public, but that in this case the route was so intricate that in foggy weather it was much too dangerous. The people might grumble, but their interests had not been neglected. In fact, the Company considered that in sacrificing the profits of the day to the safety of their passengers, they were deserving of commendation, rather than censure.

After sundown, in the City, the fog settled down very heavily, and the drivers of cars had to keep a bright lookout ahead to escape from running over crossing pedestrians, or coming into collision with stray vehicles. The slush in the streets was terrible, and some of the downtown crossings where the fashionable female board quail. No gum shoes would protect against a noisome ice-cold sea of mud that rose over the ancles. Down by the markets, especially Fulton and Washington, the mud formed broad pools through which the cars passed with a splash that sent the mud in spatters over everybody within a radius of fifty feet. The street-sellers, of course, folded their hands, and apparently are divinely calling for a vigorous rain to wash away the corruption and do their work for them. In the mean time, small-pox and whooping cough are very prevalent, being greatly assisted by sanitary mismanagement and neglect.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

Caucus of the Kings County Republican General Committee.

A Convention of the Kings County Republican General Committee was held on Saturday evening, Alderman WILLIAM RICHARDSON, as member of the State Committee, presiding. The object of the caucus was to nominate a ticket to be voted for at the meeting on the first Tuesday in January for officers of the Committee for 1872. It was decided that no contested seats be considered, and that the action of the caucus should not be binding. The Convention then proceeded to ballot for Chairman, with the following result: Silas B. Dutcher, 61; Geo. H. Fisher, 43; R. M. Whiting, Jr., 5; Samuel McLane, 1.

The caucus then nominated A. G. WILLIAMS for First Vice-President, Mr. FRANK SCHERMERHORN receiving thirty votes; WILLIAM J. CROPSEY for Second Vice-President; and M. B. BEDTOW for Third Vice-President. Messrs. NORTON and DAGGETT were nominated for Secretary and Assistant Secretary respectively; Mr. HENRY E. WHEELER for Corresponding Secretary; Mr. FRANKLIN WOODRUFF for Treasurer; and DANIEL WARD for Sergeant-at-Arms.

Short Notes.

JOHN GRAY reports to the Police that on the 29th ult. he lost a diamond cluster pin, worth $600, in going from the corner of Oxford-street and Myrtle-avenue to his residence, No. 159 Hampden-street.

MICHAEL J. MEANEY, a lad in the employ of SPAULDING & RICHARDSON, of Newark, was arrested by the Police of the Third Precinct, on Saturday evening, on a charge of stealing $25. He had half of the money on his person.

Mrs. ISABELLA MCTAMANY, aged seventy years, was discovered by the Police, on Saturday, lying ill with rheumatism, without fire and food, and the shanty in a disgustingly filthy condition. She is reported to be possessed of means. The Health Officer was notified.

Before the General Term of the Supreme Court the question will come up as to the authority of Judge BARNARD to discharge the Ludlow-street prisoners. Judge BRADY will have the Yorkville Judgeship matter continued before him, while in Chambers will come up the important question of the acceptance of "Boss" TWEED's bondsmen.

Reform Meeting at Long Island City.

On Saturday evening an enthusiastic and crowded reform meeting was held at Cheery Hall, Long Island City. The tax and also the necessity for some movement which would make it impossible for the City Government to virtually confiscate the property of the citizens were discussed. Gross frauds were charged against some of the city authorities. A committee composed of Messrs. SHERMAN, DONALLY, BARNES and MILLS were appointed to draft resolutions and prepare a plan for a permanent organization. Committees were appointed to co-operate with organizations in the other wards.

On Thursday of last week the Board of Managers of the Suffolk County Agricultural Society met at Riverhead, and appointed the 18th, 19th and 20th days of September as the time for holding the annual County Fair.

The Internationalists.

The Federal Council of the Internationalists met last evening at No. 42 Grand-street. Two new sections, one from Vineland, N. J., and the other from this City, signified their inclination to join the Society, and were admitted.

Mr. F. B. RAKER read a paper suggesting the abolition of Governmental monitorship. The question was discussed, and finally laid over until a subsequent meeting.

The Chicago Internationalists having refused further aid the fund collected for their assistance was, on motion, ordered to be returned to the donors.

The Committee on Organization reported that thirteen new sections had been organized throughout the country since last meeting.

A Mysterious Case.

An unknown man, who was evidently a German, was taken to the Tompkins Precinct Station-house, last night, insensible from intoxication, as was supposed. Two physicians who were summoned discovered, however, that he had a fracture of the skull, and that one of his arms was broken. He was immediately removed to Bellevue Hospital, and efforts were made to discover how the injuries were received, but without success. The injured man is about thirty-five years of age, five feet six inches in height, has dark hair and goatee, and was dressed in gray clothes.

THE CITY FRAUDS.

How Elections Have Been Carried in the Past.

Interesting Revelation in the Case of a Police Justice—Mayor Hall Must Resign—Judge Brady's Order in Regard to the Common Council.

JUSTICE COULTER.

That Attachment as Lawyer's Witness—Mr. Molloney.

It is a grand and a blessed thing to be a man of experience! So deeply impressed is JAMES G. COULTER, fraudulent holder of the Justiceship of the Seventh District, with the value of this ingredient of character that, when Mr. MURRAY beat him in the run for office at the election of November, 1869, he was not at all afraid. True, Mr. MURRAY had been elected; but then Mr. MURRAY might be counted out. Ah! the miseries of having to deal with canvassers who don't appreciate a nod and a wink! GEDNEY and HERRIN, the canvassers of the Seventh District at the election in question, had either not received or had perfected the advantages of a Tammany collegiate education. They actually added up the votes correctly, and gave 227 to MURRAY while only giving 223 to their friend COULTER. But the mistake was not irreparable, and Mr. COULTER quickly proceeded to put things straight.

On Park-row, well within the inspiration of the City Hall, stood the since-removed Lovejoy's Hotel, kept by Mr. JOHN FOSTER HUGGINS. Thither the guileless COULTER, with a bundle of papers peeping from the breast-pocket of his coat, the two canvassers, and some useful friends, repaired, a few days after the election, to recuperate and get away from the cold blasts raging without. So exhausted was Mr. COULTER with the recent political conflict that, in a fit of abstraction, he actually registered himself by a wrong name. Fortunately, Mr. HUGGINS recognized him, and therefore allowed him to pass unchallenged. The worn-out COULTER inquired if a private room was at their service for a few minutes. "Certainly," replied Mr. HUGGINS, "walk into my office." Hardly were these choice spirits comfortably seated and taking to themselves seven other spirits far worse than the first, in the shape of gin cock-tails and whisky punches, when in bustled one Mr. WILLIAM H. MOLONEY. A few hurried words passed between him and COULTER, and Mr. HUGGINS was asked if he could not provide a warmer room. Concealing his surprise with host-like courtesy, he at once said he would have more steam turned on. "Can't we have a room with an open fire?" inquired Mr. WILLIAM H. MOLONEY.

"If you have," replied Mr. HUGGINS; but the fire will have to be built, and the room will not be as warm as this for hours." But Mr. COULTER was bent on his purpose, and the fire was lighted and the room occupied long before it was properly heated.

Mr. WILLIAM H. MOLONEY hurriedly left his friends to imbibe by themselves; but after a sharp run to the City Hall, returned. His errand had evidently not resulted satisfactorily, for more punches were ordered, and he retraced his steps to the City Hall. Once more he returned, with beaming eye and triumphant smile playing round his mouth, and with a roll of papers, which bore a most suspicious resemblance to election return blanks, in his hand. The plot was evidently thickening; and, as the whole party, after an hour and a half of secret session, entered the office, paid the bill, and departed with a jubilant air, (Mr. HUGGINS saying, "Good day, Mr. COULTER,") it is fair to presume that it was successfully consummated. What went on in that private room Mr. RICHARD HAMLIN, one of the conspirators, coolly told before Judge BRADY in the suit of MURRAY against COULTER, and is shown in the extract from his evidence, republished below from the TIMES of yesterday. But would it not be well for Mr. WILLIAM H. MOLONEY, Clerk to the Board of Assistant Aldermen, to publish a card to the effect that he is not the WILLIAM H. MOLONEY, alias "Billy" Moloney, who brought to JAMES G. COULTER, at Lovejoy's Hotel, the election return blanks, to fill in as his fancy dictated, and then assisted him in destroying the official record of the voice of the people expressed through the ballot-box? It is to be hoped that Mr. MOLONEY will take this hint, otherwise the public will be apt to accept the statement, widely circulated, that, unlike the twin Dromios, the two MOLONEYS have an individuality.

RICHARD HAMLIN'S EVIDENCE.

"At the charter election of 1869 I was one of the canvassers of the First District of the Twenty-second Ward; Mr. GEDNEY was my associate; COULTER received 223 votes, and MURRAY 227; the returns were made and sealed, and I had them in my possession; I saw Mr. COULTER the morning after the election; he told me MURRAY was elected; he asked me to call for GEDNEY, and for both of us to meet him at the vestibule of the City Hall; I went to get GEDNEY, and then went down there, and then we went over to Lovejoy's Hotel; there were COULTER, GEDNEY, VAN BRUNT, MCCANN, BRESNAN, and myself; COULTER suggested our going there; we went first into the little room back of the office, and remained from three to ten minutes; meanwhile a room was being prepared upstairs, and when it was ready we went up; I had left one of the three returns at COULTER's house that morning; I had the other two.

Q.—What was done after you got upstairs? A.—COULTER tore open the returns I had left for him, and we there made out two sets of returns; VAN BRUNT and MCCANN participated merely as spectators, and gave suggestions what to do; the returns we made differed from the former returns. Q.—What was done with the old returns? A.—They were burned up in the grate fire at Lovejoy's Hotel at that time. Q.—Who burned them? A.—The whole party; I tore the table and threw them into the fire; I disremember now by whom; I saw them burn, though. Q.—Now as to what offices were the returns different? A.—For the offices of Police Justice and Civil Justice. Q.—Who directed what changes were to be made? A.—COULTER gave some directions and VAN BRUNT some. Q.—What directions were given? A.—When we first went over there the intention was to alter the original returns, but after the consultation among themselves they agreed that it was best to make out new returns altogether and not alter any. Q.—What were the changes made in the returns? A.—For Police Justice there were twenty-five votes added to Mr. COULTER, and nine each taken off from MASTERSON and BUCKMORE, and I think the rest added were from the scattering. Q.—What alterations were made in the other returns? A.—They were for Civil Justice; I don't remember what they were. Q.—Were any persons present at any time besides those mentioned? A.—Yes, Sir; two MCKENNY and another gentleman; they didn't come together; the gentleman whose name I don't know came alone; he had been home from the Police Headquarters; he had no uniform; all the whole eight didn't remain all the time; COULTER went away part of the time; Mr. GEDNEY didn't remain all the while, but Mr. BRESNAN did; GEDNEY and I signed the returns after they were copied; I signed them as Inspector; they were new blanks. Q.—Did I understand you that COULTER tore open the returns? A.—Yes, Sir, and put them down on a small table in the room; he didn't say anything particularly; I took hold of them, and they told me what to do; Mr. COULTER did not tell me what business he had with us until we got over there, then he understood it pretty well; after we got there he told us he lacked so many votes of an election; I can't remember any more of the conversation; they asked for the returns of the First District; he picked up eight or ten of the bundle on the bed, picked out the Fifth District and put them on the bed; he tore them up, and PATRICK MCCANN directed how many votes were to be put in; I don't remember his exact words."

The Committee of Seventy After Hall.

The following document has been forwarded to all State Senators and Assemblymen who have received the endorsement of the Committee of Seventy. The resolutions embodied in it have already appeared in the columns of the TIMES, but they will bear republication:

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF CITIZENS AND TAX-PAYERS FOR FINANCIAL REFORM OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK, ROOM, NO. 32 UNION SQUARE, (FOURTH-AVENUE) NEW-YORK, Dec. 29, 1871.

To the Hon. ——

At a stated meeting of the above Committee (the Committee of Seventy) held on the evening of Nov. 28, 1871, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That, for the purpose of reporting to the people of this City the municipal frauds of their representatives in the present session of the Legislature, the Committee of Seventy shall continue in existence until the end of the ensuing year, or until the adjournment of the Legislature of the State of New-York for the year 1872, if that shall occur at a date earlier than the end of the year 1872.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Committee that the Legislature should at the earliest practicable moment, by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the old Boards, or any other person or persons to the office of Alderman and Assistant Alderman, on the ground of any supposed vacancy existing; also forbidding him to recognize, communicate with, or hold any official intercourse as Mayor with any except the incoming Reform Boards that have just been elected. Messrs. CLINTON and LAWRENCE maintain that the law continuing the members of the old Boards in office is unconstitutional. Judge BRADY granted the writs applied for, and made them returnable at the Special Term of the Supreme Court on the second Monday of January, 1872, at 10 o'clock. The Mayor will then have to show cause why these writs should not be made absolute.

German & Co. at Sea.

Judge BRADY's order restraining Mayor HALL from recognizing the old Board of Aldermen as the legitimate City fathers for the year 1872, fell like a bombshell in their already somewhat demoralized camp, and they at once made indirect application for relief to one of the Judges of the Supreme Court. But Judge CARDOZO was wise in his generation. In reply to a question as to his willingness to hear counsel on the matter, he said: "Last night Mr. Hardy, the Clerk of the Board of Aldermen, presented the order to me, and inquired if it is not regular for Judge BRADY to grant it while I was sitting in Chambers? He also asked if I would be willing to vacate it, or to interfere otherwise? I, of course, refused any ex parte interference with Judge BRADY's order, and did nothing whatever in respect to it. Judge BRADY will doubtless frequently have to take a back seat, and be as cheerful as they can under the circumstances."

The Detained Leader.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Although you have made war upon the parties in whose praise I wish to say a word, I presume you are sufficiently generous to allow a statement of facts to be made, viz.: That upon the decease of the New-York Leader Dec. 30, 1871, they made a compensation to each man employed of $20 on account of short notice and consequent inconvenience—a matter of pure generosity, which I think it would do honor to you to punish. Serious Disaster by Fire—Partial Burning of the German Hospital.

Shortly after 7 o'clock yesterday morning fire was discovered in the elevator of the German Hospital, at Seventy-seventh-street and Fourth-avenue. The elevator is situated at the eastern end of the building, and when first seen the fire had reached the second floor. The fact of the fire was kept as secret as possible in order not to alarm the patients, and the force of the hospital working under the direction of the Superintendent, Mr. AUGUST GEISLER and the house physician, Dr. GERRIT, endeavored to extinguish the flames with the hydrant hose attached to the premises, in chief of Fort Hamilton. GEISLER had both hands badly burned, and Dr. GERRIT's right hand and the back of his head were severely injured. As the fire constantly gained headway a public alarm was given. As soon as this was done, the patients, fifty-four in number, were all removed to parts of the building remote from the fire, but none were taken from the hospital entirely, owing to the prompt and complete subjugation of the flames as soon as they got to work. Very soon they had them entirely extinguished, but they had gained such headway, however, before the alarm was sounded that the elevator was completely gutted, and a large hole had been burned in the roof. The damage, which is principally by water, will be about $10,000 to the building and $3,000 to furniture, but the loss is covered by policies in the Imperial, Germania and other companies. The building is three stories above the basement, with a mansard roof. Both in its interior and exterior it is one of the most notable public edifices in the City. The damage will be speedily repaired, and the building made as good as before the disaster.

As soon as the fact of the fire was known, and large hose-carts were dispatched, offers of assistance came from other charities. MEYER STERN, President of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, offered the use of his house for the patients of the hospital, and about 11 o'clock Mr. E. B. HAIN and Mr. SAMUEL L. LEWIS called as a committee of the directors of Mount Sinai Hospital, to offer the use of that institution. These offers were declined, however, as the building was found, after the fire was out, to be entirely habitable, and the patients were not removed from the house.

The cause of the disaster has not yet been ascertained, but it is being investigated by Fire Marshal McCRAKEN, who will shortly make a special report. The loss is much more serious than it would otherwise have been, as the fire was in the part of the building devoted to the storage of drugs and the offices of the physician.

Base-Ball—Annual Nine for 1872.

At a meeting of the directors of the Mutual Base-ball Club, held on Saturday evening, the following nine were appointed to represent the Club in 1872: Mills, catcher; Cummings, pitcher; Start, first base; Hatfield, second base; Pearce, short-stop; Boyd, third base; Beckley, left field; Egger, centre field; McMullen, right field and change pitcher. A celebrated catcher has been proposed as substitute.

The Louisiana Planters Paying Their Hands.

From the New-Orleans Times, Dec. 27.

This city has been drained nearly dry for several days past by the numerous demands for money to pay off the hands on the plantations. Several millions have gone into the country for this purpose. Planters find it absolutely necessary to square up for the holidays before making their new contracts. This requires, on the great majority of the plantations, a payment of half the wages of labor for the whole year. But many of the planters have not sold or shipped their crops, the banks and merchants have had to launch out pretty literally. Hence the money pressure. In a little while, however, the money sent to the country will begin to come back, and then our financial outlook will be cleared. One of the hardest necessities of our planters in the South-west, this season, grows out of the failure or shortness of the corn crop. This will add sensibly to shelf cash demands. In view of the generally unfavorable results of this season, our sugar planters are saving seed, laying out for a large crop next year.

The Disputed Judgeship in the Fourth Judicial District.

The Fourth District Judgeship case is likely to be amicably adjusted. The Albany Journal learns that Judge POTTER, elected by the people, and Judge JACKSON, appointed by the Governor, have made up a case to present to the Supreme Court at its first term in January. All but one point, with one exception, and that not vital, have been amicably agreed upon, and that exception will probably be adjusted before the case is submitted. It is expected that the case will pass through the Court of Appeals before the close of the ensuing month.

AN OLD TRUNDGETT'S CASE.

The Story of Martin Guerre Over Three Hundred Years Ago.

From the London Times.

We need not be told that "there is nothing new under the sun"—not even the Tichborne case. Many of those who day after day wade through six or more columns of the morning papers for a report of the passes-at-arms between "Mr. HAWKINS" and "Brother BALLANTINE," hardly suspect that particulars of still more vital interest than any that have as yet arisen from the present trial were discussed before a French Court of law more than three centuries ago. All of us are aware that in cases of natural resemblance, especially with twins, the discernment of the most familiar acquaintance is often at fault; but strange freaks of the same description have also been played by mere fortuitous likenesses. Ancient writers tell us with their tales of the "ridiculous" likeness between SYRADO, the great POMPEY's father, and his cook, and of the other still more striking resemblance of SULLA, a Roman Proconsul in Sicily, to a fisherman native of that island—a resemblance not only of features, but and first, had also of voice, manner and gesture, the additional coincidence of the habit of stammering. It is known that the Proconsul, who could not account for the phenomenon, maliciously asked his fac-simile "whether his mother had ever been at Rome," whereupon the fisherman ingenuously answered, "Not my mother, but my father."

In the case we now propose to consider, however, the identity was in a great measure a matter of imagination. People who had sworn to an undeniable likeness in perfectly good faith, and upon the strongest and most irresistible conviction, were ultimately compelled to acknowledge their error, and to give, as it were, evidence against themselves. The main facts of the case are the following: In the year 1530 MARTIN GUERRE, a native of Biesky, belonging to the class of well-to-do peasant proprietors, married a girl, by name BERTRANDE DE ROLS, an inhabitant of Artigues, in the Diocese of Rieux, in Languedoc, where MARTIN's family had settled. Both the bride and bridegroom were at the time little more than children, about eleven years old, and nine years passed before they had any children. At last a son was born, whom they called SANXI, and about these birth there were some circumstances which might be supposed to have remained a secret between the parents. It happened that MARTIN GUERRE robbed his father of some corn, and dreading the consequences of a detection of his offense, left the country, and was absent for eight years, during which there was neither trace nor tidings of him. In the interval his father died, leaving four daughters under the guardianship of his brother, PIERRE GUERRE, who managed the family estate in the name of the absent MARTIN. At the end of eight years the lost MARTIN GUERRE, or one whom every one at once recognized as such, reappeared in Artigues, and was welcomed by his wife BERTRANDE, by his sisters, by his uncle, and by all his friends and acquaintances, living with them for three years without a single shadow of suspicion. His wife, who had been warmly attached to her husband before his disappearance, was overjoyed at his supposed return, clung to the new-comer with redoubled affection, and bore him two children, one of whom died in tender infancy, however, when a soldier happened to go through the village of Artigues, who, at a private interview, communicated to BERTRANDE the startling intelligence that her real husband, MARTIN GUERRE, was living in Flanders; that he had been a soldier like himself, and had lost a leg, carried off by a cannon-ball at the Battle of St. Quentin. BERTRANDE, evidently disturbed, but not convinced, went to a notary, bade him draw up a record of the soldier's revelation, but took no further notice of them, and continued to live in the most intimate terms with the man which had now announced to her as an imposter. At the end of three years dispute arose between the alleged MARTIN GUERRE and his Uncle PIERRE with respect to the restitution of part of the property. PIERRE proceeded to acts of personal violence against the man he believed to be his nephew, and in one instance, in which he attacked him with a bar of iron, the nephew was only rescued from the assassin's fury by the interference of the loving BERTRANDE. Shortly afterwards this same nephew was arrested in consequence of a quarrel he had with one of the villagers, and while he was in durance at Toulouse an Uncle PIERRE and four of the sons-in-law of this last-named gentleman proceeded to prevail on BERTRANDE to denounce MARTIN as an imposter. But she withstood all their arguments, and to every doubt urged against the man now personating her husband, she instantly replied that he must "either be her husband or the devil." At last, the imprisoned husband was presently released on bail, and on his return to his village he was again received by her with every mark of conjugal attachment. But on the following day, early in the morning, his uncle PIERRE, with his four sons-in-law, broke into MARTIN's house with pistols in their hands, proceeding by set by power of attorney in the wife's name, arrested MARTIN, charging him with fraud and deception. The power of attorney, however, as it was proved, was only signed by BERTRANDE in the evening of that same day.

The prosecution began before the Judge at RIEUX, and witnesses were brought forward on each side. It was alleged on the part of the uncle that the prisoner was not MARTIN GUERRE, but one ARNAULD DE TILH, alias Panette, of Sacias, a man of bad character, known to many in the district from early youth. On behalf of the uncle it was urged that he had been, during the absence of eight years, recognized without hesitation by his uncle, by his four sisters, and by his wife, as well as by all the community, without any doubt ever arising as to his identity, for a whole period of three years. No change was made in the man except the growth of a long beard which had taken the place of the youthful down which frissed his chin at the time of his disappearance. It was urged that the intimacy of married life precluded the possibility of deception on the part of BERTRANDE, and much stress was laid on her known character for upright character, on the strong affection she had always shown for her husband, present or absent, and on her visible repugnance to join her husband's uncle in his prosecution. Allusion was made to those conjugal secrets regarding the birth of their first child, SANXI, which were not of a nature to find their way out of the nuptial chamber. The prisoner pointed to the fact that from the very moment of his reappearance he found himself perfectly at home on all subjects connected with his former life, greeted friends and acquaintances in their first meeting, each of them with the degree of cordiality justified by their former intimacy, reminding them of circumstances which had escaped their memory, and dwelling on particulars either of so private or of so trivial a nature that prearrangement or collusion seemed altogether out of the question. He spoke of his childhood, of his early life, his father and mother, his marriage, the priest who had celebrated it, the witnesses, the guests, the persons who, according to custom, had accompanied him within the threshold of the bridal chamber, and up to the nuptial bed, where the bride was carried. The greater portion of these circumstances of an extremely delicacy were connected with the birth of his child SANXI. He gave a most precise account of his eight years' wanderings, of his serving first in the French, then in the Spanish army, and his narrative was ascertained to be strikingly correct in every particular. BERTRANDE also bore testimony not only confirmed all the prisoner's assertions, but alluded to their long-entertained belief that their having no children for nine years had been by them attributed to witchcraft, and to the prayers, fasting and messes to which they had recourse for a counterchange in circumstances on which, on a second examination, her statements were found to tally in every respect with those of the prisoner.

Witnesses then came in to the number of 150. Between thirty and forty of them expressed no doubt about the identity between the prisoner and the long-absent MARTIN GUERRE; fifty declared that the prisoner was no other than ARNAULD DE TILH, and sixty professed themselves to be so perplexed by the resemblance between MARTIN and ARNAULD, both of whom they had familiarly and intimately known, that they found it impossible to come to a conclusion. The son, SANXI, was then produced, and no resemblance whatever was traced from him to his supposed father, the prisoner; but, on the other hand, the prisoner was said to have the family look, and to be as like the four sisters of MARTIN GUERRE "as one egg is like another egg."

Upon summing up the conflicting evidence the Judge of Rieux gave sentence against the prisoner, and condemned him as an imposter, adulterer, usurper, &c., to be beheaded and quartered. But the case was brought by appeal before the Parliament of Toulouse, and subjected to a new inquiry. The prisoner was confronted with BERTRANDE, and protested that he would abide by her decision. He would save her no other witness but her, and place his life at her discretion. "Would she swear that he was not MARTIN GUERRE?" BERTRANDE's answer was that "she could neither swear nor believe it." Four witnesses of fifty were then summoned. One of fifty, one swore that the prisoner was MARTIN GUERRE, seven that he was ARNAULD DE TILH; the remainder were doubtful. And yet all these had been well acquainted with both; they had all been boon companions together, and knew great deal more of the parties than they knew from infancy. An uncle of ARNAULD and some of his friends avowed that they had recognized the prisoner as ARNAULD from the very outset, but that they had hesitated about exposing him, either from reluctance to bring him to the scaffold, or from consideration of what the consequences might bring to themselves. In other words, they convicted themselves of false testimony.

The most singular point of the case was that, upon summing up the opinion of all the witnesses, there seemed to be no certain personal resemblance between MARTIN GUERRE and ARNAULD DE TILH. MARTIN was described as somewhat tall and dark, with a thin body and limbs, a sunken head between vaulted shoulders, a forked chin, pointed upward, a hanging nether lip, a large turned-up nose, and an ulcer on his face and a scar on his eyebrow; while ARNAULD was described as a thick-set, with a Protuberant body, a good stout leg, no stoop in the shoulders, with features so by way answering MARTIN's description, and, although he had scars about his face, no two witnesses could agree as to the precise spot on which they were. A shoemaker who had fitted MARTIN with shoes declared that he had made more tenacious and larger by one-fourth than any shoes which would suit the prisoner's foot. Other witnesses testified that MARTIN had been killed in fencing and wrestling, while the prisoner was totally unacquainted with these accomplishments; that MARTIN was a native of Biesky, while the prisoner was evidently unfamiliar with the Basque language, and broke down in his attempt to speak a few words of it. Finally, it was established that ARNAULD DE TILH was a notorious scamp, an infidel and a blasphemer, guilty of deeds of fraud and violence, a man of low manners and consummate impudence; in fact, just such a man as might be deemed capable of concocting a bold scheme of deception, and going through with it with the most brazen assurance. There, indeed, appeared one witness, by name JEAN ESPAGNOL, an innkeeper, who asserted that ARNAULD DE TILH had been his gu
